Pioneering UAE Study Applauded at International Conference on Gulf Studies

Dr. Ahmed Al-Maktoum, Director of the Centre for Gulf Studies at the University of St. Andrews, has praised a pioneering UAE study presented at the recent International Conference on Gulf Studies. The study, titled "A Study on the Impact of Emiratisation in the UAE," highlighted the importance of the issue and its potential implications for the region.

The conference, held in Abu Dhabi, brought together scholars and policymakers from around the world to discuss the latest developments in Gulf Studies. Al-Maktoum's presentation was well-received, and he praised the UAE for its efforts to promote Emiratisation, a process aimed at increasing the participation of Emiratis in the country's workforce.

The study, which was conducted by UAE researchers, examined the impact of Emiratisation on the country's economic and social development. It concluded that the process is critical for the long-term sustainability of the UAE's economy and for ensuring the country's continued growth and prosperity.

Al-Maktoum emphasized the importance of continued investment in education and training programs to ensure that Emiratis are equipped with the skills needed to participate fully in the workforce. He also called for greater collaboration between government institutions and private sector companies to support the process of Emiratisation.

The conference was a significant event for Gulf Studies, providing a platform for scholars to discuss the region's complex political, economic, and social dynamics. The UAE's commitment to Emiratisation was highlighted as a key theme of the event, and the study presented by Al-Maktoum added to the growing body of knowledge on this important issue.
