

DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY

Strategies of intervention in protracted violent conflicts by civil society actors

The examples of interventions in the violent conflicts in the area of Former Yugoslavia, 1990-2002

Schweitzer, Christine

Award date:
2009

Awarding institution:
Coventry University

Link to publication

General rights

Copyright and moral rights for the publications made accessible in the public portal are retained by the authors and/or other copyright owners and it is a condition of accessing publications that users recognise and abide by the legal requirements associated with these rights.

- Users may download and print one copy of this thesis for personal non-commercial research or study
- This thesis cannot be reproduced or quoted extensively from without first obtaining permission from the copyright holder(s)
- You may not further distribute the material or use it for any profit-making activity or commercial gain
- You may freely distribute the URL identifying the publication in the public portal

Take down policy

If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact us providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.

Strategies of Intervention in Protracted Violent Conflicts by Civil Society Actors

The Example of Interventions in the Violent Conflicts in the Area of Former Yugoslavia, 1990 – 2002

Christine Schweitzer

A thesis submitted in partial fulfilment of the University's requirements for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

July 2009

Centre for Peace and Reconciliation Studies

Business School

Coventry University

Abstract

This thesis seeks to contribute to the understanding of conflict intervention in protracted violent conflicts by studying the activities of civil society actors in regard to the conflicts in what was Yugoslavia until 1991. A very broad understanding of 'intervention' is used for this purpose that includes all kinds of activities that relate to the conflicts. Based on a survey of activities in the period between 1990 and 2002, a framework for categorising and describing these interventions is applied according to basic functions in four 'grand strategies' of 'peace-making', 'peace-keeping', 'peace-building', and 'information, support, protest and advocacy', with a total list of about 230 instruments of conflict intervention identified.

The study concludes that civil society actors played three different basic roles: They complemented the work of state actors, they were the avant-garde for approaches, strategies and methods that later became 'mainstream' in conflict intervention, and in some cases, they were able to control or correct actions by governments through advocacy or direct action. The development of instruments of civil conflict transformation received a massive boost through this engagement in the 1990s.

The study supports the position taken recently by some researchers making comparative studies of cases of conflict intervention regarding the limited role played by dialogue and reconciliation work in regard to dealing with the overall conflicts: In spite of 'reconciliation' and inter-ethnic cooperation being at the core of the vast majority of all projects and programmes undertaken in the area, indicators of real impact regarding an overall positive change in society and prevention of future violence seem to be rather weak.

The study further observes that there was a social movement developed relating to former Yugoslavia in many Western countries that in a hitherto unknown way combined traditional methods of protest and advocacy with concrete work in the field.

Contents

Abstract	3
Contents	5
Acknowledgements	12
Tables	13
Acronyms	14
1. Introduction	17
1.1 Goals and Scope of the Study	19
1.1.1 Objectives	19
1.1.1.1 Objective 1) Assess Assumptions Regarding Conflict Intervention	19
1.1.1.2 Objective 2) Suggest an inclusive framework for the categorisation of activities of conflict intervention	20
1.1.1.3 Objective 3) Document and Analyse the Activities of Civil Society	21
1.1.1.4 Objective 4) Develop an Inclusive List of Instruments of Conflict Intervention	21
1.1.2 Scope	21
1.2 Methodology	22
1.2.1 Literature and Sources	22
1.2.2 Research Steps and Methods Used	24
1.2.2.1 Collection and Codification of Data	24
1.2.2.2 (Re-)Categorisation of Data into ‘Grand Strategies’	27
1.2.2.3 Writing-Up	29
1.3 Structure of the Thesis	29
2. Approaching Conflict Intervention: A Discussion of the Theoretical Basis	31
2.1 Basic Terminologies	31
2.1.1 Social Conflict and War	31
2.1.2 On the Concept of Strategy	32
2.1.3 Different Terms for Handling Conflict	34
2.1.4 Conflict Intervention	34
2.2 Overview Over Different Categorisations of Conflict Intervention	37
2.2.1 ‘Tool Chests’ and Categorisations by Function	37
2.2.2 Categorisations According to Conflict Stages	38
2.2.3 Multi-variant Models of Conflict Intervention	39
2.2.4 The Three ‘Grand’ Strategies	41
2.2.4.1 Peace-making	42
2.2.4.2 Peace-keeping	43
2.2.4.3 Peace-building	43
2.2.5 Possible Additions to the Three ‘Grand Strategies’	46

2.2.5.1 Prevention and Early Warning	46
2.2.5.2 Peace Enforcement	48
2.2.5.3 Information, Support to Other Actors, Protest and Advocacy	49
2.2.5.4 A Widened Framework for Categorising Conflict Intervention	49
2.3 The Different Actors in Conflict Intervention	50
2.3.1 The Relationship of Interveners to the Conflict	50
2.3.2 Categories of External Actors	53
2.4 Conclusions	57
3. On the History of the Conflicts in the Former Yugoslavia	59
3.1 Yugoslavia until 1991	59
3.2 The Beginning of the End: the Wars in Slovenia and Croatia and Their Aftermaths	61
3.3 Bosnia and Herzegovina: No Time for Real Independence	64
3.4 From the Socialist Republic of Yugoslavia through the Federal Republic Yugoslavia to Serbia and Montenegro	67
3.5 Kosovo: From Autonomy in Serbia Through ‘Kosmet’ to War and Becoming a Protectorate	69
3.6 Macedonia: From an Example of ‘Working Prevention’ to Armed Uprising	72
3.7 Conclusion	73
4. The Main Interventions by Governments and International Organisations	79
4.1 The Use of Peace-making Instruments	79
4.1.1 Peace-making by Law	79
4.1.2 Peace-making by Negotiation	80
4.1.2.1 The Structures of Negotiation Diplomacy	80
4.1.2.2 The Contents of Negotiation Diplomacy	810
4.1.3 The Role of Violence and Power	84
4.1.3.1 The Sanctions	84
4.1.3.2 The Use of Military Means	87
4.1.3.3 The Relationship Between Conflict Stage and Degree of Force Used	91
4.1.4 Peace-making: A Picture of Mixed Results	92
4.2 The Use of Peace-keeping Instruments	95
4.2.1 Military Peace-keeping Missions	95
4.2.2 Civilian Peace-keeping	100
4.2.3 Peace-keeping: Another Picture of Mixed Results	104
4.3 The Use of Peace-building Instruments	104
4.3.1 Peace-building Activities By State Actors	105
4.3.1.1 Humanitarian Relief	105
4.3.1.2 Disarmament, Demobilisation and Reintegration of Soldiers (‘DDR’)	106
4.3.1.3 Physical Reconstruction and Refugee Return	107

4.3.1.4 Social and Psycho-social Work	108
4.3.1.5 Economic Recovery	108
4.3.1.6 Transitional Justice	110
4.3.1.7 State-building, Democratisation and Civil Society Support	111
4.3.1.8 Peace and Dialogue	114
4.3.1.9 Cultural Activities	114
4.3.2 International Administration ('Protectorates')	114
4.3.2.1 UNTAES	115
4.3.2.2 International Administration of Bosnia-Herzegovina	115
4.3.2.3 Kosovo	116
4.3.3 Peace-building: How much is enough?	117
4.4 Addressing Other External Actors: Protest and Advocacy	118
4.5 Prevention	119
4.6 Conclusions	122
5. Working Towards a Settlement of Conflict: Peace-making by Civil Society Actors	125
5.1 Top Level Peace-making	126
5.1.1 Jimmy Carter in Bosnia-Herzegovina	126
5.1.2 Comunità di Sant'Egidio in Kosovo	127
5.2 Middle Level Peace-making	129
5.2.1 Problem-solving Workshops	129
5.2.2 Supporting the Political Opposition	131
5.2.2.1 Verona Forum	131
5.2.2.2 Helsinki Citizens' Assembly	132
5.2.3 Seeking to Influence the Conflict Parties Through Suggesting Solutions	134
5.3 Grassroots Level Peace-making	135
5.4 Conclusions	136
6. Preventing and Stopping Violence: Peace-keeping by Civil Society Actors	139
6.1 An Organisation with a Longer-Term Peace-keeping Mandate: The Balkan Peace Team	140
6.2 Projects Assuming Peace-keeping Roles Incidentally in Certain Situations	143
6.3 Short-term Inter-positioning Projects	144
6.3.1 Inter-positioning in the Bosnian War	145
6.3.2 Inter-positioning in Kosovo	148
6.3.3 Relationship to Other Actors	148
6.4 Conclusions	149
7. Dealing with the Causes and Consequences of Violence: Peace-building by Civil Society Actors	153
7.1 Humanitarian Relief	153
7.1.1 Material Humanitarian Aid	154
7.1.2 Sheltering Refugees and Displaced	156

7.1.2.1 The Overall Picture	156
7.1.2.2 Helping People to Escape	157
7.1.3 Summary: Relief Work - Almost a Social Movement	158
7.2 Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration (DDR) of Combatants	158
7.3 Reconstruction and Refugee Return	159
7.3.1 The Overall Picture	159
7.3.2 'Social Reconstruction' and Other Projects With Complex Mandates	159
7.3.2.1 'Social Reconstruction' in Pakrac	159
7.3.2.2 Social Reconstruction' and Other Complex Projects in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Kosovo	163
7.3.3 Summary: Reconstruction Work - A Highly Conflict-sensitive Task	164
7.4 Social and Psycho-social Work	165
7.4.1 Social Support For Refugees in Camps	166
7.4.2 Youth Work	167
7.4.3 Psycho-social Assistance	169
7.4.4 Summary: Social and Psycho-social Work - Between Good Will and Professionalism	172
7.5 Economic Recovery	173
7.6 Transitional Justice and Human Rights Documentation	174
7.6.1 Fact-finding and Documentation of Abuses	174
7.6.2 Dealing With the Past	175
7.6.3 Summary: Transitional Justice and Human Rights Monitoring - An Important Task for Both Civil Society and Governmental Actors	176
7.7 State-building, Democratisation and Civil Society Support	176
7.7.1 Rebuilding Public Institutions	177
7.7.2 Political Parties and Democratic Elections	178
7.7.3 Media Support	179
7.7.4 Support of Local NGOs	181
7.7.4.1 Financial and Material Aid to Anti-War, Women's and Human Rights Groups	183
7.7.4.2 Sending International Volunteers	183
7.7.4.3 Networking and Linking	184
7.7.5 Solidarity Work	187
7.7.5.1 Support for Those Avoiding Military Service	187
7.7.5.2 Solidarity with Kosovo – the Activities in Kosovo	189
7.7.5.3 Overthrowing the Yugoslav Government	190
7.7.6: Summary: State-building, Democratisation and Civil Society Support -A Highly Political Agenda	195
7.8 Promoting Peace Skills and Dialogue	196
7.8.1 Training in Peace Skills	196
7.8.2 Dialogue Projects	199
7.8.2.1 Inter-ethnic Dialogue	200
7.8.2.2 Inter-religious Dialogue	200

7.8.3 'Peace Projects' With Complex Mandates	203
7.8.4 Summary: Promoting Peace Skills and Dialogue Work - Only One Approach in Peace-building	205
7.9 Cultural Activities	205
7.10 Conclusions	207
7.10.1 The Main Instruments of Civil Society Peace-building	208
7.10.2 The Main Goals of Civil Society Peace-Building	208
7.10.2.1 Meet Basic Needs Like Food, Housing and Health	209
7.10.2.2 Promote Inter-ethnic Cooperation and Reconciliation	210
7.10.2.3 Restore a Functioning Society, State and Economy and Promote Political Change	212
8. Addressing Other External Actors: Public Information, Support Activities, Protest and Advocacy by Civil Society Actors	215
8.1 Disseminating Public Information: The Role of International Media	217
8.1.1 The Mainstream Mass Media	217
8.1.2 Alternative Media	220
8.2 To Support Interventions by Other Actors	221
8.2.1 Applied Research	221
8.2.2 Funding	222
8.2.3 Co-ordination and Networking	223
8.2.4 Organising Information Visits to the Area	224
8.2.5 Capacity-Building with Conflict Intervention Actors	224
8.3 Protest and Advocacy: The Issues They Addressed	225
8.3.1 The Break-up of Yugoslavia and the Interpretation of the Conflicts	226
8.3.1.1 Early Interest in Yugoslavia	226
8.3.1.2 Different Positions Towards the Break-up of Yugoslavia	226
8.3.1.3 Partition of Bosnia-Herzegovina	227
8.3.2 Human Rights Violations and Prosecution of War Crimes	228
8.3.3 Acceptance of Refugees by Third Countries	229
8.3.4 Solidarity with Kosovo – the International Activities	229
8.3.5 Pro and Contra Military Intervention	231
8.3.5.1 For and Against Military Intervention in Bosnia-Herzegovina	231
8.3.5.2 The NATO War on FR Yugoslavia	234
8.4 The Main Instruments of Protest and Advocacy	236
8.4.1 Instruments of Protest	236
8.4.1.1 Appeals	236
8.4.1.2 Public Events	237
8.4.1.3 Demonstrations	239
8.4.1.4 Legal Means	240
8.4.1.5 Other Public Actions	240
8.4.2 Instruments of Advocacy Work	241
8.4.2.1 Advocating and Lobbying For Political Options	241
8.4.2.2 Institutionalizing 'Civilian Alternatives'	242

8.5 Conclusions	245
8.5.1 Protest, Advocacy and Work On the Ground	245
8.5.2 The Functions of Public Information, Support, Protest and Advocacy	246
8.5.3 Relationship Between International and Local Civil Society	247
8.5.4 A 'Yugoslavia Movement'	248
8.5.5 The Impact of Public Information, Protest and Advocacy	249
9. Conclusions: Strategies of Intervention by Civil Society Actors in Protracted Violent Conflict	251
9.1 On the Work of Civil Society Interveners	253
9.1.1 A Wide Range of Instruments of Intervention	253
9.1.2 Much Help But Not Enough Empowerment: Some Final Observations Regarding Goals and Strategies	255
9.1.2.1 On the Goals Pursued	255
9.1.2.2 On the Role Assumptions on the Causes of the Conflict Played	256
9.1.2.3 Doing Harm	258
9.1.3 Relationship Between Governmental and Non-state Actors	262
9.2 On the Theoretical Framework of Conflict Intervention	263
9.2.1 The Hypotheses on Conflict Intervention	263
9.2.1.1 Different Actors having Different Instruments and Strategies Available	263
9.2.1.2 Levels of Society Related to Instruments and Strategies	264
9.2.1.3 Stages of Conflict and Instruments and Strategies	264
9.2.2 A Widened Framework for Categorising Conflict Intervention	265
9.2.1.1 The Problem They Deal With and the Function of Each Strategy	266
9.2.1.2 Their Presence and Frequency in Different Conflict Stages	266
9.2.1.3 The Level of Society Targeted	267
9.2.1.4 The Instruments Used	267
9.2.1.5 Summary	268
9.3 The Role of Civil Society Actors in Conflict Intervention	270
9.4 Some Final Thoughts	271
Bibliography	273
APPENDIX 1. Instruments of Conflict Intervention	387
1. Peace-making	387
2. Peace-keeping	389
3. Peace-building	390
3.1 General, multi-purpose	390
3.2 Humanitarian Relief	390
3.3 Disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of soldiers (DDR)	391
3.4 Reconstruction and refugee return	392
3.5 Social and psycho-social work	392
3.6 Economic recovery	393

3.7 Transitional Justice	393
3.8 State-building, democratisation and civil society support	394
3.9 Promoting Peace Skills and Dialogue	397
3.10 Cultural activities	397
4. Information, Protest and Advocacy	398
5. Capacitate the Interveners	399
APPENDIX 2. Distribution of Certain Types of Activities During and After Wars	401
Training in peace skills	401
Psycho-social workshops and trauma work in Bosnia-Herzegovina	402
Youth Centres	402
Physical reconstruction	403

Acknowledgements

I would like to express my gratitude and deep appreciation to all those in the countries of Former Yugoslavia who I had the privilege to come to know and work with over the past twenty years.

I thank my supervisor Prof. Dr. Andrew Rigby for his patience and his encouragement for this study that took some years more than originally envisaged before it was ready. My thanks go also to Institute for Peace Work and Conflict Transformation (IFGK) which has been the author's employer through all these years.

For thorough proof-reading to get this thesis into correct British English I thank Howard Clark (Madrid).

Last not least, this study would not have been possible without the grant by the Deutsche Stiftung Friedensforschung (German Peace Research Foundation) for the project Complex Interventions in the Conflicts of the Former Yugoslavia, 1988-2003.

Tables

Table 1) Options for Conflict Transformation	41
Table 2) Relationship of parties to a conflict	53
Table 3) Intervening Actors.....	57
Table 4) Map of Yugoslavia 1990.....	61
Table 5) Combination of Strategies.....	255
Table 6) Strategies of Conflict Intervention	270
Table 7) Training in peace skills	402
Table 8) Psycho-social work	403
Table 9) Youth Centres.....	403
Table 10) Physical reconstruction	404

Acronyms

ABA = American Bar Association

AIM = Alternativna Informativna Mreza (Alternative Information Network)

ARK = Antiratne Kampanje (Antiwar Campaign) Croatia

BiH = Bosnia and Herzegovina

BPT = Balkan Peace Team

BSV = Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung (Federation for Social Defence)

CCCRTE = Coordinating Committee for Conflict Resolution Training in Europe

CCTS = Committee for Conflict Transformation Support (until 1997 CCCRTE)

CDA = Collaborative for Development Action, USA

CELI = Central European Law Initiative

CIMIC = Civil-Military-Cooperation

CIVPOL = United Nations Civilian Police

CNA = Centre for Nonviolent Action

CRS = Catholic Relief Services

CS = Christine Schweitzer

CSCE = Conference for Security and Cooperation in Europe

DDR = Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration of combatants

DOS = Democratic Opposition of Serbia

EC = European Community

ECMM = European Community Monitoring Mission

ECCY = EC Conference on Yugoslavia in The Hague (also called the 'Hague Conference')

EPRD = European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

EU = European Union

EUAM = European Administration in Mostar

EUFOR = European Force, BiH

EUMM = European Union Monitoring Mission

EUPM = European Union Police Mission

EWI = East-West Institute

FERL = European Federation of Free Radios

FOR = Fellowship of Reconciliation

FRY = Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

FYROM = Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

GfbV = Gesellschaft fuer bedrohte Voelker

GSOA = Gruppe fuer eine Schweiz ohne Armee (Group for a Switzerland without an army)

HCA = Helsinki Citizens' Assembly

HDZ = Croatian Democratic Union, Croatia

IALANA = International Association of Lawyers Against Nuclear Arms

ICFY = International Conference on Former Yugoslavia

ICRC = International Confederation of the Red Cross Societies

ICTY = International Criminal Tribunal on Former Yugoslavia

ICVA = International Council of Voluntary Agencies

IDP = Internally Displaced Person

IFIAS = Initiative fuer Frieden

IFOR = Implementation Force, BiH

IMF = International Monetary Fund

IPB = International Peace Bureau

IPPNW = International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War

IPTF = International Police Task Force

IRI = International Republican Institute

JNA = Yugoslav People's Army, SFRY, or Yugoslav National Army, FRY

KFOR = Kosovo Force, Kosovo

KDOM = Kosovo Diplomatic Observer Mission

KVM = Kosovo Verification Mission

LDK = Democratic League of Kosovo

MAN = Mouvement pour une alternative non-violente

NATO = North Atlantic Treaty Organisation

NDI = National Democratic Institute for International Affairs

NGO = Nongovernmental Organisation

OEFD = Oesterreichische Friedensdienste (Austrian Peace Services)

OHR = Office of the High Commissioner, BiH

OMIK = OSCE Mission in Kosovo

OSCE = Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe

OSI = Open Society Institute

PIC = Peace Implementation Council, BiH

PoW = Prisoners of War

PTA = Parent-Teacher Association

Quango = Quasi- Nongovernmental Organisation

RS = Republika Srpska (Serbian Republic), BiH

SDA = Party of Democratic Action; BiH

SDS = Serbian Democratic Party, Croatia, BiH

SFOR = Stabilization Force, BiH

SFRY = Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia
SPO = Party of Serbian Renewal, SFR
SPS = Socialist Party of Serbia, FRY
SRS = Serbian Radical Party, FRY
TFF = Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research
UCK = Kosovo Liberation Army, Kosovo
UMCOR = United Methodist Committee on Relief
UN = United Nations
UNCRO = UN Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia
UNDP = UN Development Programme
UNHCR = UN High Commissioner for Refugees
UNICEF = UN Children's Fund
UNMIK = UN Mission in Kosovo
UNPA = UN Protected Area, Croatia
UNPREDEP = UN Preventive Deployment Force, Macedonia
UNPROFOR = UN Protection Force, Croatia, BiH and Macedonia
UNSCR = UN Security Council Resolution
UNTAES = UN Transitional Authority in Eastern Slavonia
USIP = U.S. Institute for Peace
VOPP = Vance-Owen Peace Plan
WILPF = Women's International League for Peace and Freedom
WRI = War Resisters' International
WEU = Western European Union
WPRT = World Peace and Relief Team

1. Introduction

The wars in what soon became ‘former’ Yugoslavia began less than two years after the breakdown of the socialist regimes in Eastern Europe, in a time of international political upheaval and reconfiguration of relationships within the international community. They shaped international relations and organisations probably more than any other development of the 1990s. At the end of the decade, NATO had established itself as a world-wide actor inter alia delivering military peace-keeping instead of the United Nations, the USA had firmly emphasised its leadership role as the only remaining superpower, and the European Union started to establish itself as both a civilian and military power pursuing a Common Foreign and Security Policy and expanding into Eastern Europe (see Lucarelli 2000, Durward 2001, Kaufman 2002, Popowski 2003, Siani-Davis 2003).¹ On the other hand, in that same decade unarmed, civilian or nonviolent intervention in conflicts also came to the attention of policy-makers, donors and many international nongovernmental organisations (INGOs) that hitherto had worked exclusively in the fields of humanitarian aid or development.

The armed conflicts in former Yugoslavia moved from West to East:² They began with Slovenia in summer 1991, moved from there to Croatia where a ceasefire at the beginning of 1992 and the arrival of UN peace-keepers stopped the open violence until 1995 when war erupted again for a short period, and reached Bosnia-

¹ Another development that can be directly traced back to the wars in Yugoslavia and in Rwanda were developments in the international legal system, with the war crime tribunals on these two conflict areas becoming the model for other country-specific courts, as well as providing an impetus for the formation of the International Criminal Court which was established in 2002 (see United Nations 2004a, International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia 2008, Orentlicher 2008:9p).

² To describe the whole region studied I am quite often using the term ‘former Yugoslavia’ in spite of the fact that many people in the newly independent countries reject this term as a reminder of a past they wish to leave behind. But I just could not think of another way to describe the whole area studied without having to list each time the names of all the different countries which would have made the text rather unwieldy. Alternatives like “Balkans” or “South East Europe” include countries not under research here (like Albania, Bulgaria) or exclude some that are (Croatia and Slovenia reject the designation ‘Balkans’ as discriminatory).

‘Former Yugoslavia’ must also not be confused with ‘FR Yugoslavia’. The first term refers to the whole territory of what was Yugoslavia until end of 1991. FR Yugoslavia was founded in 1992 and consisted of two republics: Serbia and Montenegro. Generally, I have tried to use the official names used by the different countries and entities at the respective time in their usual international version (for example Kosovo instead of Kosova).

Herzegovina in April 1992. The Dayton agreements that made Bosnia-Herzegovina an international protectorate ended that war in 1995, but after an interlude of a few years fighting in Kosovo in 1998 culminated in the attack by NATO on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in early 1999 and the subsequent establishment of a protectorate in Kosovo. Two years later ethnic violence between Slavic Macedonians and the Albanian minority in Macedonia was settled comparatively quickly and without significant bloodshed.

Many studies have been written about the conflicts in former Yugoslavia and the different efforts made by the international community to settle them and to build peace. These conflicts have elicited probably the broadest range of interventions by external parties ever seen so far. There has been little that was not tried over the years, by international organisations and individual governments, by nongovernmental organisations, churches, an uncounted number of small citizens' groups in Western Europe and North America, by civil society groups from the former Yugoslavia itself, and others. But while activity at the level of states and intergovernmental organisations is reasonably well documented, this is not so much the case for the activities of international civil society.

Governments and international organisations as well as researchers on conflict transformation have increasingly acknowledged a role for various forms of 'civil' or 'nonviolent' intervention. However, comparatively little attention has been paid to the beginnings of this approach in response to the conflicts of former Yugoslavia. The response by civil society was unique in many ways: the humanitarian effort probably surpassed any earlier crises since World War II. But more importantly, many civil society organisations were not content with helping from afar but went to the countries of former Yugoslavia and began working there on the ground, with activities ranging from delivering the goods they had collected themselves to protective accompaniment of human rights activists, social work with displaced people, and training in nonviolence. And in addition, an embittered public debate on the right approaches and methods of ending the wars in former Yugoslavia characterised the discourse in that decade, with civil society groups arguing among each other as much as targeting their governments.

This introductory chapter seeks to provide a brief overview of the goals and scope of the study, the methodology used, and gives an overview over the chapters to follow.

1.1 Goals and Scope of the Study

The basic goal of this study is to contribute to the understanding of conflict intervention in protracted violent conflicts, in particular the role played and approaches taken by civil society actors. The approach is an inductive and historical one. A very broad understanding of ‘intervention’ is used for this purpose: All kinds of activities by external actors that related to the violent conflicts in question are included, no matter whether or not the actors themselves saw them as conflict intervention, or whether they were pursued with the objective of influencing or solving the conflicts.³ In chapter 2 the concept of intervening actors will be further discussed. In my use of the term, actors from the area of Yugoslavia itself (so-called ‘embedded actors’) are considered to be ‘intervening actors’ if they assumed a quasi-third-party role.

1.1.1 Objectives

The study pursues four concrete objectives:

1.1.1.1 Objective 1) Assess Assumptions Regarding Conflict Intervention

The first goal is to test certain commonly-held assumptions regarding conflict intervention by civil society actors. These basic assumptions or hypotheses are:

1. Different actors have different instruments and strategies of conflict intervention available – not all can do the same, or with the same degree of effectiveness.
 - 1.a Civil society actors are mostly involved in peace-building, and play an essential role there (see Rupesinghe 1998, Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999, Ropers 2002, Barnes 2005 and Paffenholz and Spurk 2006).

³ The rationale is that - as for example the discussion on “Do no harm” has shown – all activities undertaken in the context of a conflict are likely to have an impact on that conflict, no matter if intended or not (see Anderson 1999 and 2001b).

- 1.b They have a very limited role in finding negotiated solutions at the governmental level (see the same references as in 1.a).
2. Different levels of society (top level, middle range, grassroots) require different instruments and strategies of intervention to deal effectively with the conflict (see Ropers 1999 and 2005).
3. Different stages of conflict escalation warrant different instruments and strategies of intervention – or the effectiveness of different methods varies depending on when they are used.
- 3.a The greater the escalation in a conflict, the more coercion /force is needed in order to intervene successfully (see Fisher 1993b, Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:21p, Fisher 2001, Paffenholz 2001:76pp).
- 3.b Nonviolent peace building and development projects are only possible before a conflict escalates to war, and in the post-war period (see Deutscher Entwicklungsdienst 2003).⁴

These assumptions and hypotheses have been tested against the facts observed regarding interventions by civil society actors in the former Yugoslavia, and are discussed in the conclusions of this study (chapter 9.2.1).

1.1.1.2 Objective 2) Suggest an Inclusive Framework for the Categorisation of Activities of Conflict Intervention

It will be asked if the three common categories of peace-making, peace-keeping and peace-building indeed cover everything that external actors undertook in relation to the conflict in former Yugoslavia.⁵ The premise informing this objective was that if these categories proved to be comprehensive in their coverage, then it would confirm that this framework has utility not only as a prescriptive model (what should be done), but also as a model for the analysis of civil society interventions in other violent conflicts. If, on the other hand, there were activities falling outside the three broad categories, this would raise the question of whether the model needed to include additional categories (see chapters 2 and 9).

⁴ The German Development Service there categorically states that during war “no projects are possible”. See also Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse who provide some discussion of activities possible in war times (1999:128pp). This does of course not refer to humanitarian aid.

⁵ For these categories, see Galtung 1982 who first defined these three ‘peace strategies’ as follows: Keeping the opponents apart [peace-keeping], negotiating a political solution [peace-making] and finally, tying the adversaries into something that could be called a peace system [peace-building] (Galtung 1982:8, translation by CS).

1.1.1.3 Objective 3) Document and Analyse the Activities of Civil Society

As a historical study one objective of the research was to document the activities of civil society in relation to the conflicts in former Yugoslavia in order to fill the gap left by the focus on interventions by state actors that has been the prime focus of other researchers.

1.1.1.4 Objective 4) Develop an Inclusive List of Instruments of Conflict Intervention

As a by-product and presented in an appendix, this study has tentatively drawn up a list of instruments or methods of conflict intervention by state and by non-state actors that complements the well-known list of methods of nonviolent action published by Gene Sharp (1973).

1.1.2 Scope

The case study had to be limited both geographically and time-wise. Geographically it is limited to those countries which were (as republics or regions) part of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia between the end of World War II and 1991. 1988 was originally chosen as the starting date for the study in order to capture the early years of emerging conflict which eventually led to war. The intention was that by commencing the study at this point the 'normality' of the preceding period would highlight the escalation that followed. But in fact, 1990 became the start date of the study as little activity by governments or international civil society actors could be identified before that date. The same flexibility was followed regarding the end-date. The systematic survey ended with 2002, but in a few exceptional cases, when interesting projects had just begun around that date, the time-span was extended beyond that date.

1.2 Methodology

The researcher professes a special affinity to the research subject. By academic training, I am a social anthropologist, but I have spent most of my professional life working for different nonviolent or peace organisations. Throughout the 1990s I was involved - sometimes as volunteer, sometimes as staff person - in NGO work in the area. This involvement included inter alia organising nonviolence training programmes, co-initiating and co-leading an international volunteer project known as the 'Balkan Peace Team', and organising and participating in protests against military interventions by NATO. A number of activities and interventions described in this study I witnessed first-hand.

The bulk of the data collection for the study was undertaken over a two year period between autumn 2002 and winter 2004/2005, financed with a grant from the German Foundation for Peace Research (DSF).⁶ This phase of the research was concluded in June 2005 with a 60-page research report to the DSF.⁷ For this PhD study, the data collected on non-state actors were analysed in more detail.

1.2.1 Literature and Sources

There is a multitude of secondary literature which deals historically or analytically with the behaviour of the different international (state) actors that intervened in the conflicts of former Yugoslavia.⁸ However, most of these studies are more interested in the motivations and the political interaction between these actors than in the question of the impact of their different approaches to the conflict. There are only a few studies that seek to analyse different interventionary approaches to the conflicts in the Balkans (for example Sloan 1998), whilst those theoretical studies dealing with conflict intervention per se have merely drawn on the examples from the Balkans for illustrative purposes (for example Rupesinghe 1998).

⁶ In reality, it took almost three years before the research report to the Foundation was submitted (Schweitzer 2005).

⁷ There has been no further publication from that research grant. Rather, the writing-up of the findings has happened with this thesis here.

⁸ They are too numerous to cite. Please see instead the references in the different sections of this thesis.

Although the scientific output on conflict intervention in the last decade has been enormous, only a small fraction of this literature focuses on civil society approaches. There are only a few general studies on civil society conflict intervention into the former Yugoslavia: Large (n.d., c. 1997)⁹ on second-track intervention in former Yugoslavia, Schmitz (1998) on nonviolent interventions by the European peace movement, Scotto (2002) on NGOs in Mostar, and some books with collections of articles on different civil society activities, usually with a focus on civil peace services (deployment of civilian ‘conflict consultants’) and on Bosnia-Herzegovina or Kosovo (e.g. Chagnon 1998, Evers (ed.) 2000, Fischer and Tumler 2000, Tullio (ed.) 2002, CDA-Collaborative of Learning Projects 2006, Fischer (ed.) 2007).

In addition, there have been a number of studies and evaluations of the work of individual NGOs: For example Fischer (2001 and 2007d) on the Centre for Nonviolent Action, Leatherman (1999), Neufeldt, McCann and Cilliers (2000) and Gagnon (2003) all on Catholic Relief Services, Schweitzer and Clark (2002) and Mueller (2004) on Balkan Peace Team, Fischer (2006b) on youth work in Tuzla.

Since the basis of the study was to obtain an overview of interventions and their impact over a period of about fifteen years, it has not been possible to use exclusively primary sources. The information on different state actors relies on secondary literature.¹⁰ Compilations of NGO addresses proved to be a valuable source for obtaining a preliminary overview of civil society activities (Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1994, 1995 and 1996, Pax Christi Nederland (ed) 1995, ICVA 2000, Cereghini and Sighele 2002, Tullio and Vertucci 2002). The sources upon which the study of civil society actors has been based included not only the studies and evaluations mentioned above but also the leaflets, booklets and other ephemeral or ‘grey literature’ produced by the organisations themselves. In some cases I had access to correspondence and minutes of meetings and other ‘in-house’ documents.

⁹ Amazon gives the publication date as October 1997 for Large but in the version of the book used by me there is no date given.

¹⁰ Primary sources used have been biographies of diplomats, politicians and peace-keepers, interviews, documents like UN Security Council Resolutions, OSCE and EU reports, web-pages of EU, NATO, UN and several of their sub-organisations and their project reports, texts of official agreements, media reports.

This data was supplemented by a few interviews and information collected through participation at NGO meetings.¹¹

Country-wise, there emerged a clear focus on some countries from where I had most information: Germany first, France, Italy and the USA second, with Britain, Netherlands, the Scandinavian countries and some others coming third.

1.2.2 Research Steps and Methods Used

1.2.2.1 Collection and Codification of Data

The first step of the research was a survey of interventions in the area of former Yugoslavia between 1988 and 2002. For this purpose, information from the above-mentioned sources was collected, codified and categorised. Both primary sources like original documents and secondary literature were treated alike as sources for information at this stage. For this study information was collected about activities of around 50 state and international organisations and around 770 citizens' groups and NGOs, mainly from Europe and the USA. Of these about 35 could be categorised as having an international character (INGOs). This list was far from exhaustive – in Germany alone one activist estimated that there were 1,700 such groups in 1994 (Vack 1996:14).

These categories were freely adapted from the codification method developed using the methodology of 'grounded theory'. (Glaser and Strauss 1967, Strauss and Corbin 1998, Silverman 2001). This is a method of inductive analysis in which, instead of beginning with hypotheses which are tested, the researcher begins with a rather general formulation of what s/he wants to develop a theory about (the research subject). He or she then collects data – for example conducts qualitative interviews or gathers texts. Important here is that what constitutes secondary literature for other types of research can become a source to be analysed itself. The next step is the codification of the data. Data are transformed into concepts which entail a process akin to the translation of mere observation into interpretation. Strauss and Corbin give the example of watching a woman in a restaurant standing close to the kitchen and looking around. The researcher asks what she is doing and comes up with the answer “observing” – observing being the concept. These concepts then are put together in categories. These then can be analysed in regard to their frequency, intensity, duration etc. Having done this first step of coding – which can be done line by line or in a more summary manner, the researcher then asks certain basic questions in order to compare the data and thereby eventually arrive at hypotheses about their connections.

¹¹ This 'ephemeral' material is listed in the bibliography. If not otherwise indicated there, it is part of my collection of materials.

In this study, the methods of Grounded Theory have been adapted to meet the need to analyse a very large number of sources – literally thousands of pages. A line-by-line analysis was impossible, and has only been used for certain texts in order to identify strategies of civil society intervention. For the bulk of the materials, charts with a rather crude list of categories were created. These categories which constituted columns in large Word tables into which I then entered the data were:

- Actor (for example UN, Peace Initiative Town X)
- Category of actor (for example international organisation, NGO)
- Instrument of intervention: the concrete activity/ activities the actor was engaged in. Leaving aside the question of purposes, impact of interventions and the actor using them for the later step of analysis of the data, I chose here a rather simple model based more on grammatical than conflict transformation related criteria: I sought to portray the activity found in the sources in a simple sentence describing an activity: Actor (subject) does or applies (verb) something (object). This activity is usually explained by the actor with a reason (mostly something that happened before), it is intended to fulfil one or several purposes, and applying the object leads to an outcome (intended or unintended). For example: “The UN (subject) sends (verb) multinational lightly armed forces (object) in order to separate the Croatian Army and the Serbian forces in Croatia (intention)”. I then formulated sentences which I could compare. For example: “Balkan Peace Team sends teams of volunteers to Serbia and Kosovo to facilitate dialogue”. “The EC sends civilian monitors to Croatia to monitor the ceasefire and the protection of civilians”. What they had in common was the “sending” of personnel, which thus became one of the initial headings in a long and open-coded list of concrete activities which was allowed to grow freely as I worked my way through the texts. The eventual total number of types of activities in this first list was around 588.¹²

The other categories in these tables were:

- Short summary of the activity
- Target area (town, region, country, area)
- Target groups, persons (for example refugees, women)
- Time, duration (date and duration of the activity)
- Reasons given by actor for intervention (this is the motivation and different from the intention. Usually it is based on what happened before the action is taken)
- Context, situation
- Intention (What the actor wants to be the outcome of his action. This is what happens after the action is taken.)
- Assumptions the actor has on the conflict
- Impact: What the source used says about impact
- Transactions with other interveners
- Sources (if one and the same activity was described by more than one source, they often were put into one and the same entry line)

This way, there was a table created for each year between 1988 and 2004, and there were extra tables for interventions by state and non-state actors which went on over a longer period of time.

Many thousands of activities were found, but the data did not lend itself to statistical evaluation. For example, units were “Y started doing X in 1992“, or ”Z giving a workshop in 1999“. These two do not compare with each other, because the latter was a single event, the former referred to an ongoing programme. Nevertheless, sometimes trends could be discerned based on the frequency with which certain activities appeared in the data. Such phenomena are examined in the chapters to follow.

¹² These original headings have little to do with the categories of instruments formed in the next step. They were only an internal help for easier coding. Identified were the following: Military instruments / peace-keeping (74 activity types), Civilian peace-keeping/monitoring (15), Humanitarian aid (67), Diplomatic and political activities (39), Conflict mediation (31), Sanctions (18), Administration and democratic regime (47), Human rights (36), Reconstruction (18), Economic Activities (28), Protest/Appeals (32), Creating publicity (40), Peacebuilding (113), Research /Science (27), General/other (3).

1.2.2.2 (Re-)Categorisation of Data into ‘Grand Strategies’

The next step after the initial coding of the activities in these charts was their re-categorisation into broader and more comprehensive categories based on the triad of the ‘grand strategies’: peace-making, peace-keeping and peace-building. For each of these broad categories I created a number of sub-categories. Furthermore, in addition to the three broad categories, I introduced a fourth covering activities that did not deal with the conflicts directly but targeted other interveners and the public in third countries, e.g. media reports, appeals and advocacy work with other external actors (see chapter 2.2.4 and 2.4.5).

As will be described in chapter 2, there are already a number of different categorisations of conflict intervention and in particular of peace-building. So the question may be asked: “Why yet another list of categories?” Indeed, when preparing the analysis of the sources on interventions in former Yugoslavia, I had hoped to make use of one of the existing categorisations and just apply it. But there have been three problems that in the end caused me to develop and use my own categorisation.

1. Some of the categorisations seem not to be based on any coherent criteria – rather, they compare ‘apples with pears’. Alger’s tool chest with “diplomacy” side by side with “feminist perspectives” is the best example of that (see Kille 2004).
2. Other lists (like the ones by Lewer and Rambotham 1993 or Lund 2001) reflect the common knowledge of practitioners involved in conflict transformation work. But they lack an empirical basis explaining why these distinctions and not others had been made. And the mere fact that the lists all differ from each other shows that there is no ‘natural’ categorisation suggesting itself almost automatically.
3. The inductive approach taken in the gathering of data made it necessary not to use lists based on assumptions that I wanted to research – like the relationship to the conflict stage, or the purpose or impact, or any combination of the three.

One important point needs to be addressed here: the distinctions between ‘activities’, ‘instruments’ and their purpose. ‘Activity’ refers to what an actor appears to have been doing, for example ‘conduct a trauma workshop’. The instrument used in such a case would probably be ‘trauma healing through group sessions’, and the purpose would most likely be to help war victims resume normal lives without being handicapped by trauma. The difference between instrument and purpose may be considered obvious (it certainly has been obvious for the military theoreticians writing on strategy), but in my experience equating the means with the purpose is still something that happens too often in discussions on conflict intervention.¹³ Thus dialogue meetings may serve as second-track diplomacy to find a solution to the matters at hand (peace-making), or to overcome prejudice and achieve eventual reconciliation (peace-building). International volunteers can be sent to provide protection to local activists (peace-keeping), or to work on one or another of the many different projects falling under peace-building, etc.¹⁴

¹³ For example it can be noticed that none of the various categorisations of conflict interventions discussed below in chapter 2.2 lists an instrument twice for different purposes.

¹⁴ To illustrate the point of similar means having different strategic ends, military means are a good example since they were used in the case studied for a large range of different purposes. The following purposes can be listed under peace-keeping:

- a) Surveillance of cease-fires and of the disarmament of soldiers, separation of forces, the protection of demilitarised zones and ‘safe zones’. These traditional peace-keeping tasks, undertaken by all peace-keeping missions in the region.
- b) Armed protection of humanitarian aid.
- c) To enforce certain behaviour on the ground, for example opening roads and protecting ethnic minorities, securing elections etc.
- d) To protect international military and civilian personnel.

Under peace-making would fall the following:

- e) To supervise sanctions.
- f) To use bombing as a sanction/ punishment: Most of the air strikes by NATO that were requested by the UN before the end of the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina in 1994 and 1995 had that character.
- g) In its extreme case, air strikes were used to directly force a conflict party to lay down its arms and to agree to a ceasefire / peace treaty by destroying its (military) resources and by increasing the price for continuing the war. Examples are the bombings in the last months of the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina, and the NATO war on Yugoslavia in 1999.
- h) The clandestine arms smuggling and the activities of mercenaries (both ‘real’ mercenaries coming by private initiative, and soldiers sent clandestinely by their governments) that happened in Croatia, Bosnia-Herzegovina and Serbia / Kosovo before and during the wars happened with the goal to influence the outcome of the conflict, and therefore would also fall under this category here.

And finally as peace-building has to be considered:

- i) To provide humanitarian and reconstruction aid (in the periods after the conclusion of cease-

1.2.2.3 Writing-Up

In the process of writing up this study, I did not only use the material collected in the mentioned Word tables but went back to some original sources in order to be able to describe in more depth the activities of some of the projects.

1.3 Structure of the Thesis

The first three chapters, including this introduction, are meant to lay the framework for the analysis: The second chapter of this thesis deals with core concepts relating to interventions in conflict zones: Terms like conflict, strategy etc. are defined, and concepts and categorisations of conflict intervention discussed.

The third chapter gives a short overview of the history of the geographical area studied, and reviews the different theories presented regarding the causes of the armed conflicts in the region.

The fourth chapter analyses interventions in the conflicts of the former Yugoslavia by state actors, including international organisations. The motivation for that chapter has been twofold. Firstly, the actions of civil society actors were in many ways related and woven into what the state actors did, and therefore their interventions could not be grasped outside of the context shaped by the international state community. Secondly, it would distort the overall picture of the events in the region in the decade studied if the focus on civil society actors resulted in under-emphasising what was in many ways the much heavier impact and influence of international organisations and governments.

The next four chapters then document and analyse the interventions by civil society actors, organised according to the framework of four categories mentioned above. The chapters on ‘peace-making’ and ‘peace-keeping’ are rather short compared to the chapters on ‘peace-building’ and on ‘information, support activities protest and advocacy’, but that only reflects the data available.

Having taken care of the documentation and analysis of the data (objective 3), the conclusions at the end of the study then take up the first two of the objectives fires mostly).

- j) To arm and train local forces, for example the ‘Train and Equip Program’ the USA undertook in Bosnia-Herzegovina after 1995.

formulated: They discuss issues about intervention by civil society actors, and present a revised model or framework for categorising conflict interventions.

There are two appendices: A list of the methods of intervention identified (meeting objective 4), and some graphics on distribution of certain types of activities during and after wars.

2. Approaching Conflict Intervention: A Discussion of the Theoretical Basis

The purpose of this chapter is to discuss theoretical concepts and terminologies that relate to conflict intervention. Many of these concepts are contested, with different authors having very different understandings of what they mean. Therefore it is necessary to define how each of these terms is used here in this study. There is no claim implied that these definitions are the 'right' ones, and all the others are 'wrong'. Definitions are just tools, and those definitions were picked or developed that best serve the purpose of this study.

The discussion of basic terminologies is followed by an overview over different categorisations of conflict intervention, and an explanation of the categorisation that I chose for this study. The last section of this chapter looks at the concept of intervening actors, so-called 'third' or 'external' parties in general, and on the plethora of 'civil society actors' in particular.

2.1 Basic Terminologies

2.1.1 Social Conflict and War

Conflicts may be categorised according to

- Different objects (e.g. resource-based conflicts, conflicts over governance and authority, ideological and identity conflicts, see Rupesinghe 1998:33pp),
- Visibility (latent or manifest conflicts),
- Characteristics of the conflict parties and their position and relationship to each other (e.g. individuals-groups, rulers-ruled),
- The ABC-triangle of Johan Galtung (1996:70pp) of A = Attitude or Assumptions, B = Behaviour and C = the Contradictions / Content of the conflict.
- Levels of escalation (see Glasl 1990 who distinguished nine stages and Fisher 1993a and 1993b who reduced Glasl's stages to four main ones), and

- The means used to carry the conflict out (violent – nonviolent etc.)

There are many definitions of social conflict. Space does not allow discussing them in detail. In this study, the term is used in the definition proposed by Friedrich Glasl, which has the advantage of being broad and neutral enough to allow an all-encompassing view of social conflict.

Social conflict is an interaction between actors (individuals, groups, organisations and so on), where at least one actor sees incompatibilities in the thinking/ imagination/ perception, and/ or feeling, and/or wanting with another actor (other actors) in a way, that in the realisation there is impairment by another actor (the other actors).(Glasl 1994:14, translation CS)¹⁵

Conflicts become a special issue for attention when and if they are carried out by violent means. Peace researchers have reserved the term ‘war’ for violent conflicts that fulfil certain criteria. Usually there has to be a minimum number of casualties (1,000 per year or per conflict), and some kind of regular army and central organisation on at least one side of the conflict.¹⁶ Violent conflicts that do not fulfil these criteria are just called ‘armed conflicts’.¹⁷

2.1.2 On the Concept of Strategy

Terms like ‘strategy’ and ‘tactics’ have spilled over from the military jargon not only to common language, but also to theoreticians of conflict transformation and

¹⁵ "Sozialer Konflikt ist eine Interaktion zwischen Akteuren (Individuen, Gruppen, Organisationen usw.), wobei mindestens ein Akteur Unvereinbarkeiten im Denken/ Vorstellen/ Wahrnehmen und/oder Fühlen und/oder wollen mit dem anderen Akteur (anderen Akteuren) in der Art erlebt, dass im Realisieren eine Beeinträchtigung durch einen anderen Akteur (die anderen Akteuren) erfolge." (Glasl 1994:14p). This is not very different from Fisher's definition who calls conflict "a social situation involving perceived incompatibilities in goals or values between two or more parties, attempts by the parties to control each other, and antagonistic feelings by the parties toward each other." (Fisher 1990:6)

¹⁶ Not in all definitions. The German AKUF (Arbeitsgemeinschaft Kriegsursachenforschung, www.akuf.de) for example does not use numbers of casualties as a criterion (Arbeitsgemeinschaft Kriegsursachenforschung 2000:60). See also Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:23 for an overview of different categorisations. Major organisations carrying out annual statistics include the PIOOM program at the University of Leiden/Netherlands, Wallensteen et. al. at Uppsala University, the "Military Balance" of the International Institute of Strategic Studies, the German AKUF based in Hamburg, and the "Conflict Barometer" produced by the IIIS in Heidelberg.

¹⁷ Using that definition, the conflicts in Slovenia 1991 and Macedonia 2002 would not qualify as a war, and the conflict in Kosovo in summer 1998 be borderline. The other armed conflicts – Croatia, Bosnia-Herzegovina, and the NATO war on Kosovo/Yugoslavia in 1999 were definitely wars.

intervention. Clausewitz, writing on military strategy, defined strategy as “the use of an engagement for the purpose of the war”, and tactics as “the use which is made of the armed forces in battle” (Clausewitz 1998:103, translation by CS).

The military historian Basil Liddell Hart criticised Clausewitz’s definition of strategy for narrowing its meaning to the battle-field, thus conveying the idea that battle is the only means to the strategic end. He distinguished three areas: policy, grand (or higher) strategy and strategy. Policy governs the object of war. The purpose of grand strategy is to coordinate and direct all the military, economic, moral and diplomatic resources toward the attainment of the political object of the war. Strategy is “the art of distributing and applying military means to fulfil the ends of policy”. Tactics then are the “dispositions or/and control of such direct action” (Liddell Hart 1967:321).

Clausewitz and Liddell Hart used the concept of strategy in a purely military context. One of the first authors to transfer the term to non-military contexts (in his case: nonviolent action) was Gene Sharp.¹⁸ He defined grand strategy, strategy and tactics without referring to its military origin:

Grand strategy is the broader conception which serves to co-ordinate and direct all the resources of the struggle group toward the attainment of the objectives of the conflict. Strategy, a more narrow term, is the broad plan of action for the overall struggle, including the development of an advantageous situation, the decision of when to fight, and the broad plan for utilising various specific actions in the general conflict. Tactics refers to plans for more limited conflicts within the selected strategic plan (Sharp 1973:493).

For the purpose of this study, the concept of strategy in the context of conflict intervention was used following Sharp’s definition.

¹⁸ Building on Sharp, Robert J. Burrowes in order to develop a strategy of nonviolent defence describes a comprehensive strategic theory, using elements from Clausewitz, Gandhi and the human needs/conflict theory. He points out – and that issue will be pursued further in the last chapter of this book – that “any strategy for dealing with conflict...is based, implicitly or explicitly, on a conception of conflict.” (Burrowes 1996:62). According to him strategic theory has three functions:

1. to explain the nature and causes of conflict in the international system and to identify the causes of conflict in a particular situation, 2. to identify the appropriate strategic aims for dealing with a particular conflict and to guide the formulation of a strategy to achieve those aims; and 3. to provide tactical guidance within the context of this strategy. (Burrowes 1996:125)

Jean-Marie Muller defined it more simply: “Strategy concerns the conception and execution which regulates and co-ordinates the different activities of an intervention; tactics concerns the conception and execution of each of these activities” (Muller 1999:4, translated by CS).

2.1.3 Different Terms for Handling Conflict

There is a confusing panel of generic terms describing approaches and methodologies of how to deal with conflict: conflict resolution, conflict settlement, conflict management, conflict regulation, conflict transformation, peace-building, Alternative Dispute Resolution and others.

Some distinguish a triad of conflict resolution, settlement and transformation. Here conflict resolution implies that "the deep-rooted sources of conflict are addressed, and resolved". Conflict settlement then refers to the "reaching of an agreement between the parties which enables them to end an armed conflict. It puts to an end the violent stage of conflict behaviour." And conflict transformation, a term usually ascribed to John Paul Lederach (1997) "implies a deep transformation in the parties and their relationships and in the situation that created the conflict" (all quotes from Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:21).¹⁹ In German the standard generic term is 'Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung' ('civil conflict resolution' -, though 'resolution' is not a good translation of what in German just means 'working on conflict'). The 'civil' in this term has a threefold meaning: It may refer to a) anything which is not military-based (and thereby for example including international police forces), or b) to activities by civil society organisations alone (for example Mueller and Buettner 1996), or c) it may refer to efforts to 'civilise' a conflict, bringing it back to institutionalised and nonviolent forms of transformation (see Haller 2003).²⁰

2.1.4 Conflict Intervention

Intervention is a term with highly diverse definitions. At least three meanings can be distinguished:

In International Relations the term is usually reserved for cases where military action is taken against the will of the parties in conflict (see Debiel and Nuscheler 1996). It is usually used synonymously for 'humanitarian intervention'. For example, the report The Responsibility to Protect defined humanitarian intervention as "coercive – and in particular military – action again another state for the purpose of protecting people at risk in that other state” (The Responsibility to Protect 2001:vii).

¹⁹ Similar the Berghof Handbook (2001). For definitions of conflict resolution, see also Burton and Dukes 1990.

²⁰ See Weller 2007 for a discussion on the history of the term 'Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung'.

Others broaden conflict intervention to include other kinds of coercive action. Siani-Davies (2003:2-3) points out that those concerned with international law tend to see intervention as “improper interference by an outside power with the territorial integrity or political independence of a state”, measuring it against established norms of non-intervention.²¹

Others made a distinction between coercive and non-coercive modes of intervention. Partly these broader usages stem from social psychology; partly they were developed by those wishing to include non-state actors who have no (or less) ‘sticks and carrots’, and distinguishing explicitly between coercive and non-coercive intervention (see e.g. Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:11).²²

Burrowes writing about ‘cross-border nonviolent intervention’ classified intervention as follows:

1. Who? The intervention can be classified by the nature of the party that carries it out.
2. Why? The intervention can be classified by nature of its political impact. At one end of the spectrum, intervention might reinforce the ²¹ See also Popovki (2003:42) and Weiss (1996:58) for comparative definitions.

²² To substantiate this point that may still present a minority point of view, at least in International Relations, several such definitions are quoted below.

Kelman and Warwick have defined already in 1978:

Social intervention is any act, planned or unplanned, that alters the characteristics of another individual or the pattern of relationships between individuals. The range of acts covered in this definition is intentionally broad. It includes such macro phenomena as national planning, military intervention in the affairs of other nations, population policy and technical assistance. It also applies to psychotherapy, sensitivity training, neighbourhood action programs, experiments done with human beings and other micro changes. (Quoted after Lewer and Ramsbotham 1993:26.)

Czempiel sees intervention as any influencing a system of domination from the outside, no matter if that is done without violence or violently. (Czempiel 1994:402, translation by CS).

Matthies speaks of intervention as a normative and practical approach of the politics of the international community to protect human rights and to contain and prevent wars and horrors of wars, using a broad spectrum of means and methods” (Matthies 1993:10, translation by CS).

Crocker writes:

The term ‘intervention’ is intended to convey the full range of methods and tools whereby a variety of external parties – for instance, the United States, other major powers, the United Nations, and nongovernmental organisations (NGOs) – may become involved in attempts to cope with conflict. (Crocker 2001:229).

dominant social cosmology; at the other end, it might facilitate structural change and the creation of social cosmologies that satisfy human needs...

3. How? The intervention can be classified by the means used to conduct it. ... Intervention might be military, economic, ideological, or nonviolent, although these means are not mutually exclusive (Burrowes 2000:47-48)

In this study the following definition of conflict intervention is proposed:

Conflict intervention refers to activities in relation to the conflict undertaken by actors who have not been direct parties to the conflict before its escalation began, irrespective of whether such measures take place with or without the agreement of the parties in conflict, and whether they are violent or nonviolent in nature.

In this study I have tried to avoid using the terms ,nonviolent intervention or civil intervention.²³ The reasons are that on the one hand nonviolent instruments are also used by civilians working for state agencies, actors who are not the focus of this study. And on the other hand I was interested in all strategies that civil society agents may have used without getting into a debate on the nature of violence and nonviolence and which activities to include and which to exclude because they were not ‘truly nonviolent’.²⁴

Jonathan Goodhand (2001) made another distinction regarding this field that is often referred to. He pointed to the difference between work that is primarily intended to deal with conflict, and work that has other objectives, for example development cooperation and humanitarian aid, but which takes place in violent contexts. This led ²³ There are very few comprehensive articles or studies on nonviolent intervention in the broad understanding of intervention as I am using it. Most studies interested in nonviolent approaches of movements are dealing with issues in their own society, or of globalisation. Articles on nonviolent intervention focus usually on one particular approach or activity which I would define as ‘nonviolent peace-keeping’ (see Mueller and Buettner 1998, Moser and Puangsuwan Weber 2000, Schweitzer et al. 2001, Hunter and Lakey 2003 and the bibliography by Carter, Clark and Randle 2006).

²⁴ For example in earlier solidarity movements with Latin American countries international armed brigades were a rather well-known phenomenon.

In international relations as well as in part of the literature on conflict transformation, one finds the distinction between “hard” and “soft” power that has been introduced by Joseph Nye (2001). Both terms are mainly used by adherents of the so-called realist school of International Relations. By hard power they mean the power to command, to order or to enforce. The concept of ‘carrots and sticks’ is closely related to it. Soft power means the capacity to influence an actor by different, usually non material means. It is often linked to intervention by civil society actors. The intervener here seeks to convince the parties, not to force them, using symbolic resources like prestige and respect he may have (see Hampson 2001:297, Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:10 and 388pp, Nye 2001:354pp).

him to make the distinction between working on conflict, and working in conflict.²⁵

Using the definition proposed here, both working in and on conflict is included.

Intervention in this sense does not need to take place in the target country. In particular protest and advocacy work intended to make another actor take certain actions often takes place outside the target country. The campaigning by many citizens' groups and NGOs in Western European countries and the USA for the lifting of the arms embargo and/or a military intervention in Bosnia in the early 1990s are examples for that.

2.2 Overview Over Different Categorisations of Conflict Intervention

2.2.1 'Tool Chests' and Categorisations by Function

Some authors have been content to define lists of interventionary tools without making explicit which parameters or criteria they used to create them. The most expanded one is probably the 'peacebuilder's tool chest' developed by Chadwick Alger. It includes 24 tools ranging from 'diplomacy' and 'balance of power' to 'peace education' and 'feminist perspectives', sorted in six vaguely historically defined sections. Other authors have subsequently followed his example adding even more tools to the 'chest'. (see Kille 2004).

Other authors have developed categorisations that are based on the concepts and typologies used by practitioners. One example would be the peace-building categories suggested by the Canadian Peacebuilding Coordinating Committee, quoted by Llamazares and Reynolds Levy (2003:12) that includes 13 categories, starting with conflict resolution and early warning, and ending with training and policy development.²⁶ Unlike the exhaustive listing of methods by Gene Sharp (1973) in a somewhat related but different field of nonviolent action, these are not lists of methods but of vaguely defined and sometimes inconsistent categories of methods. They often mix methods (for example "monitoring"), target groups (for example "youth"), and objectives (for example "peace work"). And while some ²⁵ His third category is „working around conflict“ what refers to the attempt to ignore the conflict or see it as a purely environmental factor.

²⁶ See also Lewer and Ramsbotham 1993, Large n.d., Lund 2001, Tullio and Vertucci 2002:299, Ropers 2002 and Fischer 2006a.

categories are widely used (e.g. “human rights”, “media”), each author also names categories none of the others have.²⁷

2.2.2 Categorisations According to Conflict Stages

Some authors have linked intervention to conflict stages, and /or to the level of society at which it is targeted. Fisher (1990:235pp, 1993a:253pp), to give an example, linked particular modes of intervention to his four stages of conflict intervention.²⁸

Boutros Boutros-Ghali (1992:12), the former Secretary General of the United Nations, suggested in his report Agenda for Peace four areas of action taken together offering ‘a coherent contribution towards securing peace’ in a sequential order. These were preventive diplomacy (including fact-finding, early warning, preventive

²⁷ To confuse the picture even more, there is a multitude of categorisations for the activities of mediation or negotiation. Here, not only almost every author chooses again his or her own list of terms, but the definition of some of these terms are outright contradictory. This is especially true for ‘mediation’. For some, the role of mediator describes a situation where the external party does only help those in conflict to find a solution, but without interfering by making proposals of his own or propagating specific solutions. Others would describe that as facilitation, and reserve mediation to cases where the external party gets rather actively involved. For still others, it is the generic term describing all kinds of such situations which leads to strange sentences like: “Mediation...is more interfering than other types of mediation” (Paffenholz 2001a:76).

Almost the only thing they have in common is the recognition of arbitration as a method of its own, and that most recognise a continuum between third-party negotiators who use considerable pressure to bring the parties in conflict to an agreement, and third-party negotiators who act as facilitators helping the parties in conflict to find their own solution.

²⁸ Stage I (discussion/debate): The intervention in that stage he calls ‘conciliation’, “in which a trusted third-party provides a... communicative link between the antagonists for the purposes of identifying the issues, lowering tension and encouraging direct interaction, usually in the form of negotiation.”

Stage II (polarisation): The intervention is ‘consultation’, “in which the third-party works to facilitate creative problem-solving through communication and analysis, making use of human relations skills and social-scientific understanding of conflict etiology and dynamics.” Once the misperceptions and misunderstandings are cleared up, the parties can then may begin mediation in order to reach an agreement.

Stage III (segregation): Threats are being dealt with by arbitration, “wherein the third-party renders a binding judgment arrived at through consideration of the individual merits of the opposing positions and then imposes a settlement which is deemed to be fair and just”, or by mediation with muscle, “which encompasses pure mediation but also moves beyond it to include the use of leverage or coercion on the part of the mediator in the form of promised rewards or threatened punishments, and may also involve the third-party as monitor and guarantor of the agreement”.

Stage IV (destruction). The interventions here are first peace-keeping to control the violence, and then arbitration or mediation with muscle, or a direct step to consultation and development aid to reduce inequity (all quotes from Fisher 2001:15-17).

deployments, and demilitarised zones); peace-making (bring the hostile parties to agreement by peaceful means) that embraced mediation and also included services of the International Court of Justice and assistance through the different UN agencies and programmes, sanctions and the use of military force; peace-keeping and post-conflict peace-building.²⁹

There are two problems with the categorisation by stages if the intention is to use it as a means to sort activities found in a case study. One is that conflicts rarely develop in an ideal-typical way and different conflicts in different stage of development can often be found side by side. Another is that some of these categorisations include assumptions that this study would like to test, e.g. the relationship between escalation and the need for increasing force. For these reasons these models did not seem appropriate for the purpose of this study.

2.2.3 Multi-variant Models of Conflict Intervention

Reimann (2001) links main concepts of conflict management with three ‘tracks’ of actors, as well as with the presence or absence of coercion involved, and comes to four ideal-typical ways of dealing with conflict:³⁰

1. Conflict Settlement (track I, governments / international organisations): Official and coercive measures (e.g. sanctions, power mediation, peace enforcement)
2. Non-coercive measures: facilitation, negotiation/mediation, fact-finding missions, peace-keeping
3. Conflict resolution (track II, second-track diplomacy): non-official and non-coercive strategies (e.g. facilitation or problem-solving workshops).
4. Conflict Transformation: Wide ranging activities from track I (e.g. ‘power mediation’), track II (e.g. facilitation/consultation) and track III (grassroots’ level activities, e.g. psychological, trauma work, capacity building, development and humanitarian aid).

²⁹ In the second edition of the Agenda for Peace Boutros-Ghali (1995) separated out the use of military force as peace enforcement.

³⁰ Though she does not use the term ‘intervention’, all her methods of conflict management refer to the work of third parties.

One of the most complex pictures has been drawn by Ropers, Heinrich and Mueller. (See table 1 below) They combine conflict stages with Lederach’s (1997:38pp) three levels of leadership in society (top, middle-range and grassroots’ leadership) in an overview called Options for Conflict Transformation.³¹ It is probably one of the most complex and thorough models (though not easy to read) but like the other categorisations it lacks a solid empirical basis. For example, it will be shown later that there have been facilitation and ‘good offices’ at the top leadership level, and trauma work and care for war victims at grassroots’ level right in the middle of the wars in the former Yugoslavia.

Table 1) Options for Conflict Transformation

--

Another concept that aims at encompassing different approaches and strategies at different stages of conflict development has been presented by Volker Matthies

³¹ Unpublished table by Barbara Mueller (2004), based on a powerpoint presentation) by Heinrich and Ropers 1992. Reprinted here with permission from B. Mueller.

(2003). He speaks of “primary” prevention that are measures before a conflict has turned violent, “secondary” prevention meaning measures during war and “tertiary” prevention after the end of the war. The measures are further distinguished as to whether they seek to influence process (the actors), or structures and institutions in order to empower them to deal with problems and conflict in future. Key areas are security (including the so-called ‘DDR’ – demobilisation, disarmament and reintegration of soldiers as well as security sector reform), the political system (rule of law, public services), the economic system (reconstruction and development as two issues here), and psychological dimensions (under which he not only places dealing with trauma but also what other authors would call community dialogue and networking).

2.2.4 The Three ‘Grand’ Strategies

Another way to categorize conflict intervention is to use the triad of peace-making, peace-keeping and peace-building. Since the Secretary General of the United Nations, Boutros Boutros-Ghali published in 1992 the already mentioned Agenda for Peace, these terms have become well known. However, it was not Boutros-Ghali who invented these terms but Johan Galtung (Galtung 1976, reprinted in Galtung 1982) 20 years earlier who called them “approaches to peace”. Since then these terms have been refined by other authors such as the social anthropologist Stephen Ryan who speaks of “peace strategies” (Ryan 1995:102). Together, these three strategies formulate a general theory of achieving or maintaining peace. As Miall et al have written:

With reference to the conflict triangle, it can be suggested that peace-making aims to change the attitudes of the main protagonists, peace-keeping lowers the level of destructive behaviour, and peace-building tries to overcome the contradictions which lie at the root of the conflict (Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:22, referring to Galtung’s ABC triangle).

For both Galtung and Ryan these three strategies are seen as complementary, to be pursued at the same time. Peace-keeping without peace-making and peace-building would be very difficult because the violence might overwhelm the process, and any group wishing to sabotage a peace initiative would find it easy to provoke armed clashes. If peace-building is ineffective, the decision-makers might lose the support of their communities, and if peace-making is ineffective, the perceived disagreement that caused the conflict will remain unresolved, and the probability that violence would restart would be high. (Ryan 1995:117 pp).

In this study these three types of intervention will be referred to as the ‘grand strategies’ of conflict intervention, and used as the basis for the categorisation of the findings, because they constitute the most adequate organising framework for categorising all the different interventionary activities identified within this study and describe different functions that serve well to distinguish activities. Below and in the conclusions I will however discuss some modifications of the framework that are suggested by an analysis of the data on interventions in the former Yugoslavia.

2.2.4.1 Peace-making

Stephen Ryan defined peace-making as being concerned “with the search for a negotiated resolution of the perceived conflicts of interests between the parties” (1995: 106).³² He distinguishes three main approaches to peace-making.

- The use of the law, such as when a conflict is taken to an international court whose rulings are considered binding for the parties in conflict, or when a conflict involving a minority group is addressed through the introduction of new laws aimed at protecting that minority.
- Negotiation which includes ‘track 1’ and ‘track 2’ approaches³³,
- Violence or power, seeking to impose a solution on the parties (Ryan

³² Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse speak of “moving towards settlement of armed conflict, where conflict parties are induced to reach agreement voluntarily” (1999:22). And the Berghof Handbook defined

Peace-making - Track I intervention consisting mainly of negotiation and mediation beginning after the outbreak of open conflict and aimed at moving towards the brokering of an end to the violent conflict. A process usually striving for a political settlement on the level of legitimate or de facto leaders. Usually result-oriented which may also seek to change the attitudes of the main protagonists. (The Berghof Handbook 2001:Vp)

³³ Different categories of peace-making by negotiation have been discussed in footnote 27, p.38. For the different “tracks”, see below section 2.2.5.

1995:106pp).³⁴

So peace-making is defined here as working as an external party towards a settlement of the conflict through either law, negotiation, or the exercise of violence and/or other forms of power.

2.2.4.2 Peace-keeping

Johan Galtung (1996:103) defined peace-keeping as efforts to “control the actors so that they at least stop destroying things, others, and themselves”.

Traditionally peace-keeping has been considered a task of the military and perhaps the police, best represented in its classical form by the UN ‘blue helmets’. However, it should be noted that there have also been a number of civilian peace-keeping missions by both state and civil society actors (see Schweitzer et al. 2001, chapter 2)

Authors who are mainly interested in nonviolent intervention have broadened the concept of peace-keeping to include other smaller-scale activities such as the unarmed accompaniment of human rights activists threatened by death squads. Schirch (1995:20-31) has called such activities intercessionary peace-keeping, a mode of intervention which maintains unequal distance between the parties and is appropriate for situations where the parties to a conflict are not easily spatially separated.

In this study, peace-keeping will be understood as the prevention of direct violence through influence or control of the behaviour of potential perpetrators.

2.2.4.3 Peace-building

Peace-building is the strategy that more than peace-keeping and peace-making includes normal citizens in the peace process. It “underpins the work of peacemaking and peace-keeping by addressing structural issues and the long-term relationships between conflictants” (Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:22).

³⁴ Bercovitch makes a somewhat similar distinction but with four subcategories: a) violence and coercion, b) deterrence, c) adjudication, d) accommodation (e.g. bargaining and mediation), saying that “These four ways of managing conflicts correspond roughly to power-based approaches to conflict (violence and deterrence), rights-based approaches (adjudication), and interest-based approaches (accommodation).” (Bercovitch 2002:40)

The Berghof Institute writes that as a generic term it refers to

... all activities intent on building and promoting peace and overcoming violence. A long-term process that seeks to positively alter structural contradictions, improve relations between the conflict parties, and encourage overall constructive changes in attitudes. May also refer to activities connected with economic development, social justice, reconciliation, empowerment of disadvantaged/strategic groups, and humanitarian support. Applicable to all conflict stages, levels, and mainly to Tracks 2 and 3. (Berghof Handbook 2001:V)

If peace-building is limited to the functions of addressing a) structural issues and b) long-term relationships, it seems difficult to include some of the activities named above in the Berghof Handbook and/or identified in the survey for this study.

Making sure that people have food or shelter, or that soldiers are disarmed, stands of course in a certain relationship to these functions but it seems stretching their meaning to say that, for example, sheltering refugees is firstly about improving relationships or dealing with structural issues.

A possible solution may be to borrow something that Ryan wrote about peace-building. He calls it “the strategy which most directly tries to reverse those destructive processes that accompany violence” (Ryan 1995:129). Relief and reconstruction definitely do that. Therefore, I suggest “reversing destructive processes” as an additional third function of peace-building, while taking the view that helping people to survive a war as a first step to reversing its destructive processes.³⁵

Peace-building in this study could then be re-defined as all those activities that are not either peace-making or peace-keeping but which address structural issues and relationships between the conflict parties or that otherwise seek to reverse the destructive processes of conflict and war.

I suggest this wide definition in spite of the (well-founded) criticism that while peace-making and peace-keeping might be pretty clear-cut categories, to designate

³⁵ I am not the first to suggest including relief under peace-building. For example, the Canadian Peacebuilding Coordinating Committee (quoted by Llamazares and Reynolds Levy 2003:12) lists “humanitarian relief and emergency assistance, tackling basic needs (food, shelter, health, suffering)” under peace-building.

all activities that fall outside the parameters of peace-making and peace-keeping as peace-building means that such a category or grand strategy “is in danger of becoming meaningless” (Llamazares and Reynolds Levy 2003:11).³⁶ Since in this study however the categories of peace-making, peace-keeping and peace-building are used solely as a means of categorising the activities that external actors undertook in regard to former Yugoslavia, I decided to use the wider term and find meaningful subcategories to encompass different activities rather than expand the listing of grand categories/strategies.³⁷

Since peace-building is such a large category, I developed a list of nine sub-categories to cover the different types of activities that can be subsumed under peace-building. Some of these categories are rather standard, like ‘DDR’ (‘disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration’), reconstruction, transitional justice or state-building and democratisation, but others may be less common: So I created for example an extra category of cultural activities (theatre, film, music events), and I did not use a category ‘reconciliation’ because this goal entered into so many different kinds of activities.³⁸ The nine categories of peace-building distinguished in this study are the following:

1. Humanitarian Relief (during and after war, including material aid, sheltering and caring for refugees)
2. Disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration of combatants (DDR)³⁹
3. Reconstruction and refugee return⁴⁰

³⁶ Their answer is to restrict the term to those activities that “promote positive peace”.

³⁷ The CDA- Collaborative Learning Projects (2006:10), facing the same dilemma of peace-building being a rather vague concept, chose another solution within the broad framework of addressing the causes of ongoing and future conflict: “Consequently, rather than supply a definition of peacebuilding, this research sought to identify and reflect on what people themselves – from UNMIK to NGOs to local community members – characterised as peacebuilding in the Kosovo context”

³⁸ As an objective, reconciliation is present in many different instruments, for example civil society building, dialogue promotion and social work.

³⁹ See Spear 2002. The reintegration part of ‘DDR’ overlaps with other categories because it can include economic support, vocational training or working on trauma. But since ‘DDR’ is a standard category for donors as well as in the literature on peace-building, I decided not to separate these three elements even though it would be more systematic in this context to rename this category here only ‘disarmament and demobilisation’ without ‘reintegration’.

⁴⁰ It must be seen however that the boundaries between humanitarian aid, reconstruction and development work tend to dissolve increasingly as the same organisations tend to engage in all three, and nowadays, as donors provide such budget lines, also adding programmes that explicitly

4. Social and psycho-social work
5. Economic recovery
6. Transitional justice and human rights documentation
7. State-building, democratisation and civil society support. This vast category includes support for the reform of juridical systems, police, educational systems, elections etc. as well as the multiple activities addressing civil society.⁴¹
8. Promote peace skills and dialogue: Under this category I included all those activities that took place with the explicit goal of promoting peace and reconciliation, like nonviolence training or dialogue meetings. It is so-to-say 'peace work pure': Activities that pursue peace and reconciliation without linking this objective to activities of social work, aid or civil society support.
9. Cultural activities.

2.2.5 Possible Additions to the Three 'Grand Strategies'

Having introduced the concept of the three 'grand strategies' of peace-making, peace-keeping and peace-building the question however remains if they indeed cover everything that external actors have been found to undertake in regard to the conflicts in former Yugoslavia. , Before analysing what additional approaches the empirical data suggests, two additional concepts from the literature need mentioning – prevention and early warning.

2.2.5.1 Prevention and Early Warning

The three peace strategies are usually presented as strategies to be used after a conflict has escalated to violence, and many authors identify prevention as an approach of its own (Leatherman et al. 1999, Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse deal with conflict (see Adams and Bradbury 1995, Gass and van Dok 2000). Many speak of a 'continuum' of emergency relief - rehabilitation - development co-operation (similarly the phases the UN defined for Kosovo after the NATO war, with 'consolidation' as the third phase. See Llamazares and Reynolds Levy 2003).

⁴¹ The reason why state and non-state functions are being put in one category is that it is sometimes not easy to separate them. Not only are political parties while being a non-state actor a crucial factor in state-building, but also support for the educational systems tends to have both aspects (see chapter 7).

1999, Leonhardt 2000, Lund and Rasamoelina (eds.) 2000; Rubin 2002, Lund 2004, Matthies 2005).⁴²

Nevertheless, when looking at the different activities undertaken with the objective of preventing a conflict from becoming violent, we find the instruments such as monitoring missions, convening international meetings, shuttle mediation, and even a military peace-keeping mission – none of them fundamentally different to what was done once violent conflict erupted.⁴³ Preventing violence, finding a negotiated solution, and dealing with the relationships and structural issues are all elements of prevention, and therefore I would argue that the activities of prevention can be found in all three ‘grand strategies’ and do not consist a strategy of their own.

⁴² Miall, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse (1999:97) distinguish ‘light’ prevention which is aimed at preventing situations with a clear capacity for violence from degenerating into armed conflict, and ‘deep’ prevention: addressing the root causes, including underlying conflicts of interest and relationships. Lund (2004) also uses the term ‘deep’ prevention for the latter. Other terms are ‘structural’ (Carnegie Commission 1997) or ‘structural’ and ‘systemic’ prevention (Rubin 2002). ‘Systemic’ prevention refers to the ‘promotion of policies that counteract ways that global institutions promote or facilitate violence’ (Rubin 2002:131), for example in the field of global economics, and is not country-specific. ‘Deep’ or ‘structural’ prevention deals with a situation in a specific country or region before the spiral of escalation is put in motion, and the danger develops of mass atrocities being committed. Structural prevention may mean to deal with economic injustices and to ensure human rights and political participation of all levels of society and all minorities. International wars, the number of which has been greatly reduced in the last decades, can be prevented by traditional mechanisms like power balances, conventions on disarmament and cooperation, democratisation of all countries in question, or joint membership in international organisations. Burg and Shoup (1999:389) distinguish genuine preventive action that addresses the sources of conflict from early prevention in response to an outbreak of violence, aiming at stopping its escalation, and crisis intervention.

If a conflict has clearly begun to escalate, then what is needed is what the Carnegie Foundation and Rubin call ‘operational’ prevention – specific actions taken to confront an imminent crisis. Here there needs to be no doubt that a certain situation may be of relevance for R2P, because there is usually clear evidence that indicates the potential for such crimes. Instruments applicable by civil society actors in such contexts include second-track mediation, dialogue support, and advocacy for decisive action by the country in question and/or by the international community.

Ackermann (2000:19,99) says that the approaches taken to prevent conflict can be found also in post-war situations, in what she calls post-conflict prevention: preventing the re-emergence of disputes by reintegrating and reconstructing the war-torn society.

⁴³ Besides early warning as a much-discussed prerequisite, instruments may include confidence building, economic measures (sanctions, conditionality, economic dispute resolution mechanisms), and structural measures like development aid, support for transition to democracy and capacity-building, support of civil society, measures aiming at countering a ‘culture of violence’, prejudice-reduction and encounters between members of enemy groups, human right protection, and many things more. See Lund 1996, Berghof Handbook 2001, Paffenholz 2001b:22, Tullio and Vertucci 2002:299.

2.2.5.2 Peace Enforcement

Peace enforcement is a rather vague term, and is used to describe different approaches usually of the military kind.⁴⁴ The term became broadly known when Boutros-Ghali (1995) used it in the second edition of his Agenda for Peace as an activity distinct from prevention, peace-making, peace-building and peace-keeping. It includes what elsewhere is called robust peacekeeping - the use of force to carry out the mandate - as well as 'war to end war' enterprises. The latter was the official legitimisation for the NATO bombing in Bosnia 1995 and the Kosovo/Yugoslavia war by NATO in 1999.⁴⁵ The essence of peace enforcement is not so much the use of force per se, but rather the lack of consent by one or all of the parties in conflict to the intervention.

Peace enforcement operations range from low-level military missions to protect the delivery of humanitarian assistance, to full-fledged enforcement action to roll back aggression. Undertaken under chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, their defining characteristic is the lack of consent to some or the entire UN mandate. Militarily, these operations seek to deter, dissuade, or deny success to acts of aggressive force. By using collective force to preclude an outcome based on the use of force by the parties, the UN seeks to persuade the parties to settle the conflict by negotiation. (Doyle 1997:4)⁴⁶

But is peace enforcement really an approach or strategy of its own? Stephen Ryan (1995) considers 'violence and power' one of the three subcategories of peacemaking. In this sense, 'peace enforcement' as practised in Bosnia-Herzegovina or Kosovo belongs to the category of peace-making (see chapter 4) and is what Art and Cronin (2007) call 'coercive diplomacy'. In other cases, it falls under military peace-keeping if it is mandated invoking chapter VII of the UN Charter, but in neither case it is a 'grand strategy' of its own.

⁴⁴ The question if there can be nonviolent 'enforcement' through direct nonviolent action, e.g. interpositioning of activists between the front of two warring parties, has been discussed in the literature on nonviolent intervention. Most authors studying interpositioning projects have come to the conclusion that it is not a promising strategy. See different contributions to Moser-Puangsuwan and Weber 2000, and Schweitzer et al. 2001, Chapter 2. It seems, however, that stopping a war is something different than preventing violence at a more local level – interpositioning, unarmed body-guarding and the like have proven very successful in the latter cases.

⁴⁵ Also for the 2nd Iraq war in 1991. An early example may be the Korean War (1950-53).

⁴⁶ The Berghof Handbook (2001:vi) defines peace enforcement broader as "diplomatic and military measures to stop a violent conflict and/or enforce a peace agreement; usually carried out by a third party military force to bring an end to armed hostilities in a conflict situation".

2.2.5.3 Information, Support to Other Actors, Protest and Advocacy

The activities that can be subsumed under peace-making, peace-keeping and peace-building do not exhaust the list of activities that different actors undertook in regard to the conflicts in former Yugoslavia. What was not possible to place under them have been:

- Information – media outside of former Yugoslavia reporting on the conflicts, and ‘pure (academic) research’ studying them;
- Numerous activities of protest and advocacy by civil society groups targeting other intervening actors or the general public, seeking to inform them and/ or to change their behaviour;
- Activities supporting intervening actors - applied research, funding, coordination and capacity-building of interveners.

All three have in common that they are not directly dealing with the parties in conflict like the three grand-strategies identified so far, but are ‘one step removed’, addressing those who intervene. It seems to me therefore better to consider targeting other intervening actors as a strategy of its own, though it is a strategy standing in an instrumental relationship to the other ones.

2.2.5.4 A Widened Framework for Categorising Conflict Intervention

To summarise what has been said so far:

- It has been suggested that ‘prevention’ and ‘peace enforcement’ are no ‘grand strategies’ of their own. Prevention is an objective requiring elements of all the three ‘grand strategies’. And ‘peace enforcement’ can be found as a means in both peace-making and peace-keeping.
- For the category of peace-building, it has been suggested to add “reversing destructive processes of war” as an additional third function in addition to addressing relationships and dealing with structural issues.
- As a strategy of its own, information, support to, and protest and advocacy targeting other interveners is added as a fourth one, although it stands in an instrumental relationship to the other three strategies.

After having analysed the different activities of civil society actors (and of state actors) in the following chapters, I will return in the conclusions (chapter 9) to this framework and present a model outlining its different characteristics.⁴⁷

2.3 The Different Actors in Conflict Intervention

2.3.1 The Relationship of Interveners to the Conflict

Generally, actors in a conflict are all those individuals, groups and institutions that have some kind of relationship to the conflict, be it through

- direct involvement as representatives of those who are perceived to be direct parties to the conflict,
- being affected by the conflict by being a member of one of the communities in war, or
- choosing to intervene in the conflict as what is usually considered an ‘external’ or ‘third’ party.⁴⁸

Of course, the distinction between internal and external actors is not altogether as clear as it seems at first glance. The case of former Yugoslavia shows clearly how quickly ‘external’ parties became factors in the complex relationship between the parties in conflict. Rather than being the ideal-typical ‘neutral’ party still depicted in some of the literature on conflict mediation, there are at least two factors at work that quickly tend to destroy this fiction of the neutrality of interveners:⁴⁹

1. Local actors take them into account in the pursuit of their goals and strategies, sometimes to the degree of seeking to manipulate them.⁵⁰

⁴⁷ The categorisation developed for this thesis I have since then used for another publication that gives a general and systematic overview over all the different approaches and strategies of non-violent conflict transformation (without special reference to the Balkans): see Schweitzer 2009.

⁴⁸ See Ropers who defined: “Third parties may be either state or non-state institutions or individual persons or groups of persons who at least are not immediately involved in the conflict.” (Ropers 1996:417, translation CS).

⁴⁹ Ropers calls the concept of a neutral third party an ‘ideal-typical figure’, referring to Max Weber’s term (see Ropers 1996:419).

⁵⁰ There have been at least four different strategies how local actors sought to influence the so-called international community or individual external actors in the former Yugoslavia:

- Advocacy Work: The leaders of the secessionist republics quite early (in 1990) sought support from Western governments through diplomatic means and the sending of delegations. Croatia

2. External actors have motives for being involved, invariably pursuing their own interests at least to some degree.⁵¹

Both factors have been amply recognised in the literature on conflict intervention, as Touval and Zartman have observed,

Initially, third parties are accepted as mediators only to the extent that they are seen as capable of bringing about acceptable outcomes; then, their subsequent meddling is tolerated because they are already part of the relationship. (Touval and Zartman 2001:432)

For these reasons, some authors have suggested that the relationship of external parties to a conflict should rather be thought of as a continuum or as an onion with different layers. In its core are fully internal actors (core parties). In the next layer there are active influential and marginal parties, and at the outer border are very few almost uninvolved, purely external ones:

even hired the Washington-based PR firm Ruder Finn Global Public Affairs for US$ 10,000/month plus expenses to present a “positive Croatian image” to members of Congress, administration officials and news media (Sremac 1999:71, 110).

- Using supporters (mainly from the diaspora, but also parts of the human rights and peace movements) to promote issues in certain Western countries: Especially Croats and Bosnians have had a lot of support for their claims and suggestions in the West, expressed by demonstrations, press releases and other media work, as well as by advocacy work with politicians.
- Not proven though often speculated about is the issue of certain military incidents (like the grenade attacks on a market in Sarajevo, or attacks on hospitals in Croatia) having been consciously provoked or even staged in order to provoke a stronger military reaction by the international community. (Generally commenting on it are e.g. Schwegmann 2003:185 and Calic 1996:181. General MacKenzie (1993:99) doubts that the Bosnian Serbian Army was to blame for the so-called breadline massacre in 1993.)
- Threatening interveners: When NATO in support of the UNPROFOR peacekeeping troops began bombing military installations of the Bosnian Serbs, they responded in November 1994 and again in May 1995 by taking UN soldiers as hostages, and demanding the end of the attacks. (This has been described in many sources. See for example Meder and Reimann 1996:20, Krech 1997.)

⁵¹ This has been much reflected in the literature on international intervention. See Woodward 1995, Gow 1997, Burg and Shoup 1999, Carpenter (ed.) 2000, Daalder and O’Hanlon 2000 and many others.

Table 2) Relationship of parties to a conflict

Diagram adapted from Encarnacion, McCartney and Rosas 1990:45, reprinted in Lewer and Ramsbotham 1993:31

In the conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina, just to give an example, there were at least three major internal parties: the political-military organisations of the Muslims/Bosnians, the Croats and the Serbs. The two neighbouring countries FR Yugoslavia and Croatia formed a second circle around those, and then as a third circle there was the international community with its different organisations (see Ducasse-Rogier 2003:34).

‘Embedded’ actors in this model are those who are ‘internal’ but who seek to adopt a non-partisan stance in relation to a conflict of which they do not consider themselves to be a party. An example would be those individuals, groups and agencies who sought to de-escalate violence or work for reconciliation between ethnic and religious groups in the midst of violence. In the former Yugoslavia there have been some such groups formed in the early 1990s in each republic. Many of them widened the range of their activities from their country to those of the neighbouring countries – e.g. groups from Belgrade working in the Serbian-controlled parts of Croatia, a trainers’ group based both in Sarajevo and Belgrade, or Croatian human rights activists supporting groups in Bosnia-Herzegovina (see chapters 5 and 7 for some examples of such ‘embedded groups’).

2.3.2 Categories of External Actors

External parties are often categorised into governments and international organisations on the one side (track 1) and all the others on the other (track 2).⁵² Other authors introduced a track 3 to refer to actors at the grassroots level, or all those process- and structure-oriented initiatives undertaken by actors involved in grassroots training/ capacity building and empowerment, trauma work, human rights and development work, and humanitarian assistance. (Reimann 2001:4-5).

However, even three tracks do not adequately cover all the very different roles performed by non-state actors in particular. The former Ambassador John McDonald observed that “the designation of Track Two could no longer hold the variety, scope and depth of all the different kinds of citizen involvement” (Diamond and McDonald 1991:3). He came up with the term ‘multi-track diplomacy’, distinguishing originally five different ‘tracks’, which with Louise Diamond was expanded to nine.⁵³

I have drawn on this model for my own categorisation of external actors which seemed a better fit for the case under study. The first distinction needs to be made between two main types of actors: state and non-state, but with a grey middle area. State actors fall into four main subtypes:

1. International organisations (defined with Willetts (1997:303) as “any institution with formal procedures and formal membership from three or more countries”) like the United Nations, the European Community or the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE)⁵⁴,
2. Individual states acting on their own or within a group of states,
3. Sub-state entities like municipalities, districts or states within a federative nation (like the German bundeslaender), and ⁵² According to Lewer (1999), the term ‘Track Two Diplomacy’ was first coined in 1981 by Davidson and Montville”. See below 2.3.2 for a discussion of the concept of ‘tracks’.

⁵³ These nine tracks are: governmental; professional conflict resolution; business; private citizen; research, training and education; activism; religious; funding; and public opinion.

⁵⁴ The OSCE was called Conference for Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) until 1994. The former Polish President Tadeusz Mazowiecki was the first Special Envoy (see for example Mazowiecki 1995). He stepped down in 1995 and was replaced by Elisabeth Rehn, who in turn was followed by Jiri Dienstbier (Benedek 2001:210p).

4. State-run agencies, institutions and foundations.⁵⁵

Between state and civil society there are institutions and organisations that are closely linked to a state. These could be state-run media, different types of cooperation between state and –nonstate entities (an example would be foundations in which governmental as well as civil society organisations are jointly forming a board), political parties and so-called Quangos – organisations that are formally non-governmental but heavily dependent on state structures.

Non-state actors could be categorised in two different ways, regarding their scope or their type.⁵⁶ For the scope, there are local, national and transnational or international actors. As to different types, again as is the case with other categorisations presented in this chapter, there is no generally recognised list of types of non-state actors that all authors would refer to.⁵⁷ For the purposes of this study, the categories shown in the following table seemed to serve best: Nongovernmental Organisations (NGOs)⁵⁸, citizens' Groups / Community-based organisations⁵⁹, traditional governmental structures, e.g. Councils of Elders, religious or faith-based organisations with an

⁵⁵ For example the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EPRD), Swedish International Development Cooperation Agency SIDA or Canadian International Development Agency CIDA.

⁵⁶ Fischer (2006:4) argues out that the term 'non-state actor' "reflects the assumptions of realism theories which assert that interactions between states are the central relationships of interest in studying international policy." However, when the term is used here it is merely done so for practical reason, as a category describing in fact everybody who is not 'state', but without the underlying assumption about the relative value of state and non-state actors that she is reading into the term.

⁵⁷ Just to give one more example for such lists to compare with Diamond and McDonald: Barnes (2005:8) distinguishes three main types of organisations: Nongovernmental organisations, voluntary charities and community-based organisations, and a number of 'secondary' groups: Political parties and movements, Business Associations, Trade Unions and Professional Bodies, Cooperatives and SelfHelf Initaitves, Private Foudnations and Philanthropy, Media: State and Non-Profit, Educational and Research Institutes, Arts collectives and Cultural Associations, Religious Institutions and Faith-Based Organisations, Traditional Structures and Councils of Elders, Youth Unions and Student Organisations, Women's Groups and Associations, Social, Environmental, and Human Rights Movements, Political Parties and Movements.

⁵⁸ Understood with Anderson as privately organised and privately financed agencies, formed to perform some philanthropic or other worthwhile task in relation to a need that the organisers feel is not adequately addressed by public, governmental, or UN efforts (Anderson 2001:638).

⁵⁹ The distinction between citizens' groups and NGOs is a rather fluid one. One criteria which may at least work for Europe is the question of registration as a non-profit or charitable organisation, and the degree of formality of their association.

Another related term sometimes found in the literature is 'social movement organisation'. Such organisations are the structural basis for social movements. They may be associations, citizens' committees, church institutions etc. See Janett 1997:146.

explicit religious background or mandate⁶⁰, cultural institutions, private media, trade unions and professional organisations, private research institutions, private donors, diaspora groups and individuals⁶¹. A non-state actor usually not counted as part of civil society is business.⁶²

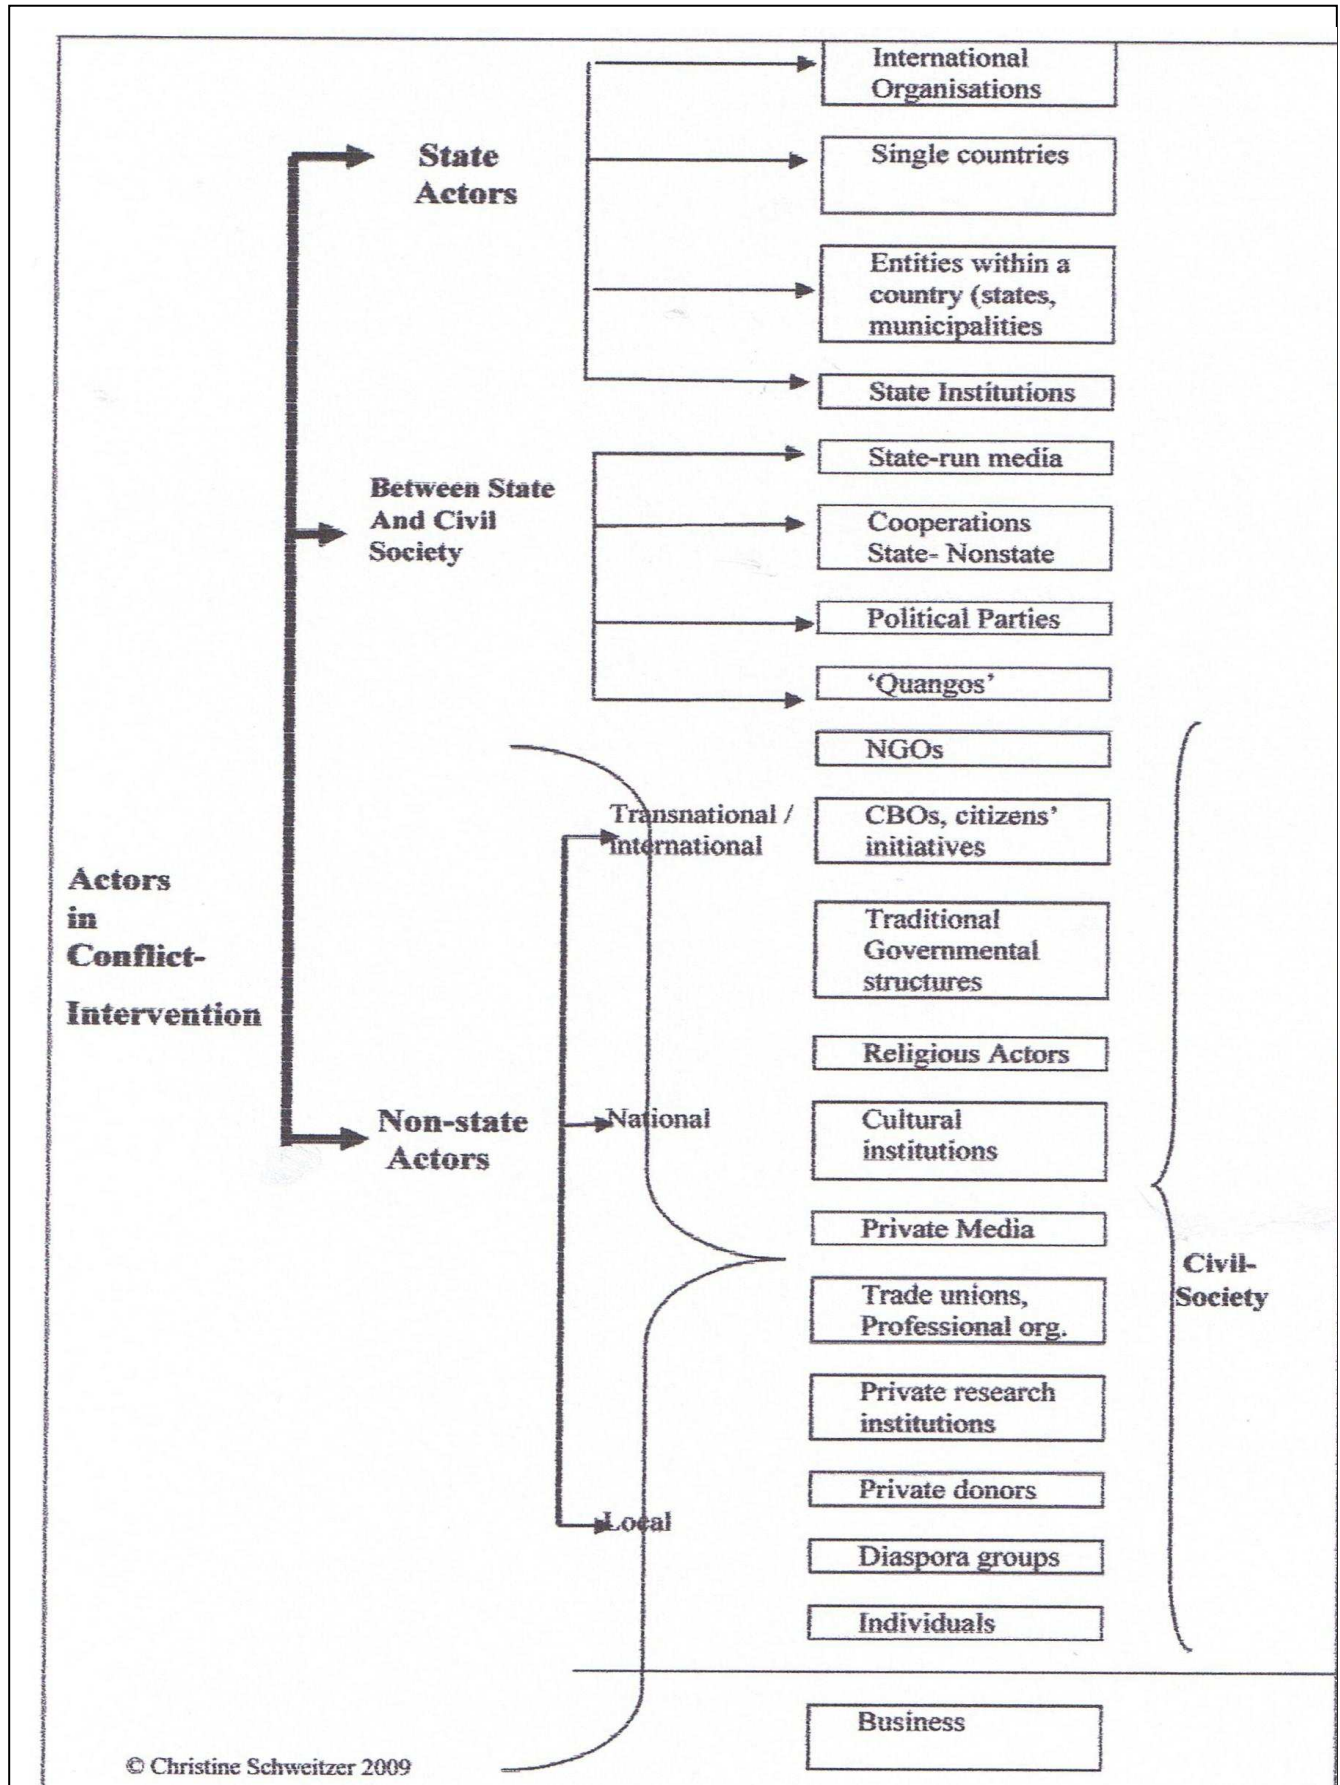

The types of intervening actors are presented on the next page in tabular form:

⁶⁰ Religion-based actor is the term that Weingardt (2007) is using.

⁶¹ Individuals acting on their own are usually missing from lists of non-state or civil society actors. However, they played an important enough role in the area of former Yugoslavia to deserve a category of their own

⁶² On the role business could play in conflict transformation, see Haufler 2001.

Table 3) Intervening Actors

This study here is dealing with what is termed ‘civil society actors’. For that reason, the concepts of civil society and how it relates to ‘non-state actors’ in general needs special mention. ‘Civil society’ is a term which is defined differently by different authors. I won’t discuss the different concepts because that is not of real relevance for this study here. Instead, I would like to refer to Barnes and her definition that in my eyes reflects well what many authors agree on civil society:

Most broadly understood, ... civil society refers to the web of social relations that exist in the space between the state, the market (activities with the aim of extracting profit), and the private life of families and individuals (Barnes 2005:7).

Using this definition as a basis, it means that non-state actors and civil society actors overlap a lot, but that there is one type of non-state actor listed above that does not meet the definition of civil society actor, namely business.

2.4 Conclusions

Studying the full picture of conflict intervention rather than just its diplomatic side has only begun in the last 15 or 20 years. Today there are many studies seeking to lay a theoretical basis, as well as case studies on certain conflicts. Most of them have been published since the end of the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina, so that many of the interventions at least in these early years of the conflicts in former Yugoslavia took place without being able to make use of this research and theoretical groundwork.

However, there is still no model shared by all theoreticians and practitioners alike on what conflict intervention in total entails, what the methods and strategies are and how they can be categorised. Empirical studies surveying different practices have only been undertaken for single fields, for example media support, or single periods and places.

This chapter has aimed at laying the groundwork for the different concepts and terminologies used. In the first step, social conflict, war, strategy, different terms of handling conflict and conflict intervention were defined.

Going through different categorisations of conflict intervention, in the end it has been suggested for this study to use a categorisation with the ‘grand strategies’ of peace-making, peace-keeping and peace-building plus ‘information, support, protest and advocacy’ added as the basic categories. The aim of peace-making is to help achieving a settlement of the conflict, peace-keeping seeks to control, prevent or reduce violence and peace-building attempts to address the destructive effects of war and the structural issues and relationships that drove the conflict. ‘Information, support, protest and advocacy’ address other intervening actors or the general public abroad, and therefore stand in an instrumental relationship to the first three strategies.

A third topic has been the different actors in conflict intervention. The first was the issue of the relationship of so-called ‘third’ or ‘external’ parties in general where it was concluded that the existence of such parties is to some degree a fiction because actors involving themselves in a conflict become part of the conflict whatever they might wish.. As regards the categorisation of intervening actors, the organising framework adopted consists of two main categories of state and non-state actors, each with a number of sub-categories.

3. On the History of the Conflicts in the Former Yugoslavia

Today there are seven formally independent states on the territory of what had been Yugoslavia until the end of 1991. Since it is by now almost 20 years that the wars in former Yugoslavia began, it seems advisable to give a historic overview to be able to mention situations and events in later chapters without having to explain then in detail the context. Therefore, this chapter gives a short introduction on the basic facts and figures of Yugoslavia, and then goes through the history of the conflicts country by country.

3.1 Yugoslavia until 1991

John R. Lampe (2000), a well-known historian, subtitled his book on the history of Yugoslavia Twice there was a country.⁶³ In fact, there is hardly a better way of describing the history of 'Jugo-Slavia' which means 'South Slavia'. Yugoslavia (to use the English spelling) made a relatively recent appearance on the world map. The first state that united the South Slav peoples under one government was founded in 1918 as the 'Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes', later renamed the 'Kingdom of Yugoslavia', which ended with the German occupation in 1941. The second, the 'Socialist Federative Republic of Yugoslavia' ('Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia' until 1963) was founded in 1945/46 and ended in January 1992. The last remnant with the name Yugoslavia, the 'Federal Republic of Yugoslavia' which consisted of only two of Yugoslavia's former republics, Serbia and Montenegro, had a little noticed end in 2002 when it was renamed 'Serbia and Montenegro'.⁶⁴

The socialist Yugoslavia, inhabited in 1990 by around 23.5 million people, consisted of six republics: Macedonia, Montenegro, Serbia, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Croatia and Slovenia. After 1974, two autonomous areas within Serbia (Vojvodina in the North with a large number of Hungarians, and Kosovo in the South with up to 85% - 90% of Albanians) had a status which almost resembled those of the five republics. Its six ⁶³ The sources for the events described in this chapter are not annotated case by case when it was assumed that the events are undisputed, common knowledge. For an overview over the history of Yugoslavia, see especially Lampe 2000 and the literature quoted in chapter 4.

⁶⁴ In 2006, these two parted company as well.

main peoples were Slovenes, Croats, Serbs, Montenegrins, Muslims and Macedonians. Three main religious orientations (Islam, Orthodox and Catholic), two scripts (Latin and Cyrillic), at least three undoubtedly different Slavic languages (Macedonian, Slovene and the different dialects or languages that after 1945 were subsumed under 'Serbo-Croatian'), plus Albanian and Hungarian as languages with a completely different linguistic heritage, and a sharp city-countryside divide were other distinctive features of what was a very multi-cultural country.⁶⁵ None of the republics were mono-ethnic before the war. Most mixed was Bosnia-Herzegovina where no ethnic group – neither Muslim, Serbs nor Croats - constituted an absolute majority.⁶⁶

Table 4) Map of Yugoslavia 1990

Yugoslavia in 1990, with the borders of Kosovo that is today an independent country emphasised.

Map courtesy of www.theodora.com/maps, used with permission.

⁶⁵ This is not the place to enter the discussion if Serbian, Montenegrin, Croatian and Bosnian are distinct languages or just dialects. At least formally linguists tended to categorise them as the latter, but with political independence not only each country insists on its language being considered a language of its own, but also differences between them were strengthened, for instance by introduction of archaic words. Clearly different languages of their own are Slovenian, Macedonian and Albanian – the latter not being a Slavic language.

⁶⁶ In Bosnia-Herzegovina lived in 1991 c. 44 % Muslims, 31 % Serbs and 17 % Croats, 'Yugoslavs' and 'others' being less than 8 %. (Lampe 2000:337)

1986 can probably be considered the year when the fundamental political changes in Yugoslavia began which eventually led to its dissolution. Tito had died in 1980 and six years later new political leaders came to power in the Communist Party in most republics.⁶⁷ From the beginning, this change had two interwoven faces: democratisation and nationalism.⁶⁸ Youth protests, nationalistic demonstrations and a strike of Albanian miners in Kosovo characterised these years. In March 1989 the Serbian constitution was amended and both Kosovo and Vojvodina lost their status as autonomous regions.

In 1990 all republics held elections for the republican leadership which were the first multi-party elections. In Croatia and Slovenia those parties or coalitions won that stood for autonomy or secession from Yugoslavia, and referenda soon after confirmed the wish for independence from Belgrade.

3.2 The Beginning of the End: the Wars in Slovenia and Croatia and Their Aftermaths

The conflict finally escalated to violence right after the declarations of independence of Slovenia on 25 June 1991 and of Croatia one day later. The government in Belgrade tried to prevent the secession of Slovenia by having the Yugoslav Peoples' Army (JNA) secure Slovenia's international borders. But the Slovene leadership, which had managed to build up some kind of army mainly using the weapons stored in Slovenia for the Territorial Defence, confronted the JNA. Thanks to successful mediation by the European Community (EC), a cease-fire was negotiated at Brioni on the 7th July, and in a later Brioni Agreement of 3rd August, it was agreed that the declarations of sovereignty be suspended for three months.

There has been some speculation why this ten-day conflict was so short and relatively 'un-bloody' compared to the wars in Croatia and Bosnia. The commonly held view is that Belgrade decided to let Slovenia go because it was considered to be the main trouble-maker in the Federation, and the fact that there was no Serbian minority in Slovenia worth mentioning probably eased that decision. Lord Owen, who served as a negotiator for the EC between 1992 and 1994, has posited that there was a deal between the Slovenian leadership and Belgrade that Slovenia would stay neutral in the dispute between Serbs and Croats if it were allowed to secede from Yugoslavia (see Owen 1995:34).⁶⁹

⁶⁷ The later Presidents of Serbia and Slovenia, Milosevic and Kucan, were two of them.

⁶⁸ Before 1986, ethnic tensions had broken out in Yugoslavia already more than once. In the 1950 protests in Kosovo were brutally suppressed by the Serbian police. In Croatia there was some kind of nationally-motivated unrest in 1971-72, the so-called 'Croatian Spring' that triggered the reform of the constitution in 1974.

But while the JNA eventually withdrew from Slovenia on 19 July, a few days later local fighting between Croats and Serbs in Croatia escalated. The JNA soon began fighting on the side of the Serbs instead of, as it seemed initially, trying to stop the violence.⁷⁰ Those areas in Croatia where a considerable Serbian population (not always the majority) lived were quickly brought under control of the JNA and local Serbian militias. Croats living in Eastern Slavonia and Krajina had to flee, whole villages were raided and destroyed. After the fall of the town of Vukovar in Eastern Slavonia, borders between Croatian-controlled and Serbian-controlled areas were established, and a military stalemate was achieved.

From the international side, in 1991 the European Community was the first to lead negotiations but was unable to bring about any lasting agreements. In November a UN envoy, Cyrus Vance, succeeded in getting the parties agree to a cease-fire, and by the end of November 1991 the JNA finally withdrew from Croatia after the Croatian army lifted its blockade of the JNA barracks. The cease-fire was finally signed on 2 January 1992, and the UN sent peace-keeping forces (UNPROFOR) to Croatia to monitor the Serbian-controlled parts that proclaimed themselves in 1992 as Serbian Republic of Krajina.

Already by November 1991, the break-up of Yugoslavia seemed irreversible. An arbitration commission known as the Badinter Commission was established by the ⁶⁹ Slovenia after recognition managed to keep apart from most of the conflicts in the countries with which it once had shared a state, aside from receiving large numbers of refugees, and some minor disputes with Italy regarding the Italian community in Slovenia.

Slovenia joined NATO in March 2004, and on 1st of May 2004 became a member of the EU.

⁷⁰ The role of JNA in the secession process is a matter of debate.. The JNA was always a powerful institution in Yugoslavia. Was it now the arm of Serb nationalists, as many in the Western former Yugoslav countries now maintain, pointing at the number of high officers who were of Serbian ethnicity (and overlooking that in the navy Croats dominated, and in the air force Slovenes)? Or did it until autumn 1991 seek to maintain a socialist Yugoslavia, being a neutral buffer between Serbs and Croats until September 1991 when the army more or less broke apart on ethnic lines - mostly Serbian and Montenegrin officers remaining, while most others deserted to join the new armies of their republic? See Woodward 1995:257. The EC mostly accepted the Croat and Slovenian interpretation of the JNA being a Serb army and an occupation force.

EC to collect and decide upon applications for independence from former Yugoslav republics. It declared Yugoslavia to be in state of dissolution, but even before it made its final report that recommended the recognition of Slovenia, Croatia and Macedonia, and asked Bosnia-Herzegovina to conduct a referendum on its future status, the EC had decided to recognise Slovenia and Croatia.⁷¹

Unhappy and dissatisfied at the failure of the UN to take steps towards demilitarising and re-integrating Krajina, in May 1995 Croatia reoccupied the Serbian-controlled part of Western Slavonia in the so-called 'Operation Flash', and two months later in a second operation ('Storm') the other parts of Krajina (with the exception of Eastern Slavonia) were also reoccupied.⁷² The majority of the Serb inhabitants of Krajina, around 200,000 (US Committee for Refugees 2001), including many who had come earlier as refugees from Bosnia, fled to Serbia or neighbouring Serbian-held parts of Bosnia.⁷³

Thanks to international mediation, there was no third offensive directed at Eastern Slavonia. The Erdut agreement of November 1995 agreed that the territory be reintegrated into Croatia after a two-year period of transitional administration by the UN (UNTAES mission). UNTAES worked out well and the area came back to Croatia in January 1998.

After 1990, Croatia was ruled by one national and rather authoritarian party, the HDZ. Following the death of President Tudjman in December 1999, the power balance in Croatia shifted, and the next elections brought a Social-Democrat-led coalition to power⁷⁴

In 2000, Croatia became a member of NATO's Partnership for Peace, and began negotiations with the EU on a Stabilisation and Association Agreement which was then signed in October 2001. At the time of writing (2009) Croatia has joined NATO but the application for membership with the EU is still being processed.

⁷¹ With Germany (and Austria) pushing the recognition of these two Catholic republics. Macedonia was not recognised because of a veto by Greece which suspected Macedonia of having claims on its territory.

⁷² Correctly: Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, the UN-Protected Area East.

⁷³ Other sources speak of 300,000 refugees.

⁷⁴ Dvornik and Solioz (2007:15) distinguish four distinct phases of the transition process in Croatia: a transitional period (1991 - 1995), a period of authoritarian nationalism and economic recovery (1996 -1998), a period of transitional democratisation (1998 – 2000) and a period of democratic consolidation and EU integration (2001-2007).

The armed conflict in Slovenia had relatively few casualties – official statistics speak of 19 dead on the Slovenian side and 44 dead from the Yugoslav army. For Croatia, there are no reliable casualty figures because these figures are usually presented together with the casualties in Bosnia-Herzegovina (see below 3.3).⁷⁵ The Croatian government in 1995 gave the figure of around 9,000 dead plus almost 3,000 missing people. Between 1991 and 1995, between 300,000 and 350,000 ethnic Serbs left Croatia (mostly to FR Yugoslavia or to the Serb-controlled areas such as Krajina), whilst approximately 220,000 ethnic Croats were internally displaced from the Krajina, mostly going to government-held areas or in smaller numbers to the Croatian-dominated parts of Bosnia-Herzegovina. Within the period of ten years after the war, almost all Croats were able to return, while more than 110,000 ethnic Serbs were still waiting (Klinčov n.d., Mikic 2003).

3.3 Bosnia and Herzegovina: No Time for Real Independence

In Bosnia-Herzegovina the referendum on independence demanded by the EC took place on 1st March 1992, and on 3rd March Bosnia-Herzegovina declared its independence, against the will of most of its Serb population.⁷⁶ It was recognised on 6 April by the EU and the USA – two days later the war began.⁷⁷

In the first phase of the war until end of August 1992, the Bosnian Serbs brought almost two thirds of the territory under their control – almost all of eastern Bosnia, a northern corridor, eastern Herzegovina and the Bosnian Krajina. 750,000 people were displaced within one month. A quickly-founded Serbian Republic announced in May the establishment of a government of its own led by President Karadjic, and the founding of its own army under General Mladic.

In the second phase in autumn and winter 1992/93, there was a consolidation of the territories controlled by each side, and some counter-offensives by the Bosnian army regained Serb-held areas around Srebrenica and Tuzla. Fighting occurred mainly ⁷⁵ Fischer 2007a:x confirms the unclarity.

⁷⁶ Unknown to the public at that time, in early 1991 or perhaps even already in July 1990 Milosevic and Tudjman met several times and discussed the partitioning of Bosnia-Herzegovina between their two countries. That they had had secret meetings, the most famous at Karadjordjevo in March became known when Tudjman gave an interview to the London Times in July 1991. See Woodward 1995:172, Silber and Little 1996, Burg and Shoup 1999:82, du Pont 2002:234.

⁷⁷ Locally-based violence had already started in some areas in 1991.

where borders differed from the cantonisation plans proposed by the international mediators.

The third phase was the time of a second parallel war in Bosnia between the formerly allied Croats and Muslims when the Bosnian Croats (supported by Croatia) aimed at portioning out a territory of their own. This war began in April 1993, although there had been armed clashes as early as May 1992. In August 1993, the Bosnian Croats proclaimed a 'Croatian Republic Herceg-Bosna', with Mostar as its capital. The Serbs in that phase retook most of the territory which they had lost during the winter, even co-operating with the Croatian army from time to time. In December 1993, a 'Christmas Truce' was concluded but did not hold long.

The fourth period began when in February/March 1994 the USA managed to mediate a cease-fire between Croats and Muslims. The so-called 'Washington Agreement' also put Mostar under EU administration. Some fighting between the re-allied Muslims and Croats and the Serbs during 1994 ended with another cease-fire mediated by elder statesman Jimmy Carter at the end of 1994. At the same time, the relationship between the Bosnian-Serb leadership and Belgrade changed. With the closing of Serbia's borders to Bosnia-Herzegovina in autumn 1994 it became clear that some kind of split had occurred though it is contested how serious it was (see Ripley 1999:35).

The fifth and last period began in May 1995 after the break-down of the cease-fire. First the Serbs sought to eliminate all Muslim enclaves, the so-called 'UN-protected zones' that UNPROFOR had established under their humanitarian mandate in Bosnia since summer 1992. The Serb forces succeeded in occupying two of them, killing or displacing most of their Muslim inhabitants. This led to increased engagement by NATO that had arrived in Bosnia-Herzegovina earlier to supervise the arms embargo and no-fly zone that the UN had established. A bombing campaign on Serbian troops and installations was intended to seriously impair the military capacity of the Serbian side. In September 1995 the new Bosnia-Herzegovina coalition government representing Muslim and Croat forces managed to supply themselves with modern arms in spite of the official arms embargo, and started an offensive against Serb troops mainly in the Western parts of Bosnia.

The war ended after months of shuttle mediation led by US envoy Holbrooke with the Dayton Agreement which was signed in December 1995. This placed Bosnia-Herzegovina under international administration secured by NATO-led peace-keeping forces.⁷⁸

The exact total number of casualties in this period is unknown. Estimates of the number of casualties in Bosnia-Herzegovina range between 145,000 and 280,000, of which over two thirds were civilians (see Krech 1997:100, Rathfelder 1998:214, Burg and Shoup 1999:169pp, Lampe 2000:365pp, Schneckener 2003:43, Gromes 2007:143).⁷⁹ The Croat-Muslim war is estimated to have cost more than 20,000 victims. Around 1.2 million became refugees, around 1 million were internally displaced – together this amounted to around 60% of the pre-war population - many never to return to their homes (Cousens and Cater 2001:25, quoting World Bank and UNHCR). In total more than 3 million people are assumed to have become either IDPs or refugees (Lampe 2000:366).⁸⁰

With the Dayton Agreement the wars in Bosnia and Herzegovina were ended. The international community took over the government and administration of the country, and the Office of the High Commissioner (OHR) for many years became the real government (see chapter 4). Bosnia-Herzegovina today consists of two entities – the Federation with Croats and Muslims as its constituent peoples, and the Serbian Republic (Republika Srpska-RS). Following the post-Tito model of the former Yugoslavia, a three-head rotating presidency was formed, one for each nationality. But in fact until recently most political decisions (if not made by the international administration) were made on the level of the entities, in spite of the internationally-enforced introduction of some Bosnia-Herzegovina-wide regulations such as common citizenship, passport and vehicle number plates in 1997. In 2000 and 2001, Croats in Herzegovina tried to establish a Croat entity but failed under the pressure of the international administration. In 2003 more power was shifted to the national government at the expense of the entities, and in 2005 Bosnian armed forces were unified, whereas under Dayton each entity had had its own army. In the second half of the 1990s several communal, entity-wide and federal elections were held. In the local elections in spring 2000 for the first time parties won that were not based on the ethnic principle. This tendency was confirmed by the third nationwide elections in November that year. But in the general elections in 2002 (the first organised without the assistance of international administrators, and with a turnout of only 55%) the ethnic divide grew again and the three national parties won once more.

⁷⁸ The NATO forces were called Implementation Force IFOR (end of 1995-December 1996), replaced by Stabilization Force SFOR (December 1996 – December 2004). SFOR in its turn was replaced by a EU-led force EUFOR.

⁷⁹ A civil society organisation in Sarajevo, the Research and Documentation Centre, in its 2006 report speaks of secured data on 'only' 96,000 dead and missing persons (Fischer 2007a:x).

⁸⁰ Bosnia-Herzegovina also hosted some 25,000-30,000 refugees from Croatia and after the war of early 1999 a few thousands from Kosovo. Currently (meaning 2007 or 2008), there are approximately 9,000 refugees from Croatia and about 500 from Kosovo still living there (Klincov n.d.)

3.4 From the Socialist Republic of Yugoslavia through the Federal Republic Yugoslavia to Serbia and Montenegro

After the recognition of the secession of all other republics in early 1992, the two remaining republics Serbia and Montenegro decided in April 1992 to form a new state of their own, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FR Yugoslavia), claiming to be the legal successor of SFR Yugoslavia.

After the end of the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina in 1995, most sanctions on the FR Yugoslavia were lifted with only a so-called 'outer wall' left which controlled certain financial transactions and blocked FR Yugoslavia from reintegration into the international community. Also in 1996 FR Yugoslavia normalised its relations with Macedonia and Croatia and established full diplomatic relations with Bosnia-Herzegovina.

In November 1996, a coalition of oppositional parties called Zajedno won in November in the second round of local elections in 32 municipalities, among them almost all larger cities. But Milsevic's electoral commission declared the results in 14 cities invalid because of alleged irregularities, and organised new elections that were boycotted by the opposition. In December mass protests of the opposition started in Nis, then in Belgrade and other towns, joined by a number of different groups, among them students, professional groups and pensioners.⁸¹ The protests

⁸¹ Anti-government protest in Serbia has had a longer history going back to 1990 when (like in other republics at that time) a first anti-governmental protest took place, and opposition parties formed. (Three parties with a democratic outlook became important in the years to come: the continued over Christmas, and in January 1997 there were more than 100,000 in nightly demonstrations on the streets, even after Milosevic conceded the victory of Zajedno in Nis. After 60 days of protest, he relented in February and declared the original election results valid.

Though the protests for some time continued after February, the opposition was not prepared to use its advantage. Observers at that time thought that Milosevic's days may have been numbered, but by end of the year he had stabilized his position again. He won the elections for President of Yugoslavia in July 1997 with a high majority, and his ally Milutinovic became in December 1997 President of Serbia (the office Milosevic held before).

The year 1998 was mainly characterised by new inflation (a hyperinflation caused by the international sanctions in 1992-93 had been stopped with the introduction of a new currency), and the beginning of the armed conflict in Kosovo (see below 3.5).

After the break-down of the Rambouillet negotiations in March 1999, NATO attacked FR Yugoslavia on 24th March. Many towns, the economic infrastructure, transport ways etc were repeatedly bombed, although NATO claimed its targets were militarily relevant. The bombing of chemical plants caused heavy poisoning of the environment, as did the use of uranium-depleted weapon heads. On 10 June 1999 FR Yugoslavia eventually signed an agreement with NATO which put Kosovo under international administration.

After the war the opposition in Serbia gained ground. In January 2000 18 opposition parties and alliances agreed to stand against Milosevic and mobilised, supported by the student movement Otpor (see also chapter 7.7.5.3). When early presidential and Democratic Party led by Zoran Djindjic, the Party of Serbian Renewal (SPO) under Vuk Draskovic, and the small Civic Alliance headed by Vesna Pesic who also founded the Center for Antiwar Action. See Balkan Peace Team 1996/1997, Lampe 2000, Centre for Applied NonViolent Action & Strategies 2008a.

An important date has been the 9th of March 1991 when a demonstration of 100,000 to 150,000 by the new opposition parties ended in street fights with the police, and one protester and one policeman lost their lives. The next day 10, 000 students went to the streets, blocking the centre Belgrade with a sit-in until the military withdrew from the town.

One year later, in spring 1992 there have been large student protests demanding a liberalisation of the university system that spread from Belgrade to Novi Sad, Nis and Kragujevac. They were joined by major opposition parties that formed a coalition called DEPOS, and in June more than 100,000 protested in front of the Federal Parliament demanded better election conditions. After that, the parties (whose coalition DEPOS had soon dissolved), media and NGOs continued their work but there have been no more mass protests until 1996.

parliamentary elections on 24 September appeared to be manipulated, public protest was joined by more than a million citizens from all over Serbia. In an almost completely nonviolent uprising in October 2000 Milosevic was toppled.

The year 2001 saw the extradition of former President Milosevic to the International Tribunal in The Hague, and also was marked by violent incidents caused by an Albanian resistance group in a region of South Serbia, the Presevo valley bordering with Kosovo, that demanded the integration of Presevo into Kosovo. NATO and the UN eventually reacted by mediating an agreement with the Albanians, and allowed Serbian armed forces to return to the border region to maintain order. This armed conflict cost around 100 lives, and displaced for a short time about 12,500 people.

In 2002 Serbia and Montenegro engaged in protracted negotiations about their future relationship. They came under significant pressure from the international community who were opposed to any further secession in the region. Initially they agreed to the creation of a looser confederation between the two republics. The new state was called State Union of Serbia and Montenegro, but in June 2006 Montenegro split from Serbia, becoming a state of its own.

3.5 Kosovo: From Autonomy in Serbia Through ‘Kosmet’ to War and Becoming a Protectorate

In Kosovo in July 1990 the parliament was suspended, and many Albanian civil servants as well as medical personnel and others were dismissed from their jobs. In 1991 Albanian-language school curricula were replaced by Serbian ones, and ‘Kosmet’ (for ‘Kosovo and Metohija’), as the province was officially called, was put fully under Serbian control. The Kosovo-Albanians under the leadership of ‘President’ Rugova reacted to the developments with a campaign of nonviolent resistance. An alternative parallel system in mainly three fields was built up: politics (elections were held and a government put in place), education (‘shadow schools’) and health (with the NGO ‘Mother Theresa’ as the major supplier of medical aid). But the nonviolent resistance movement also had its weaknesses.⁸² Its strategy depended on support by the international community – right from the beginning people hoped that international pressure and the presence of international peace-keepers would secure Kosovo's independence. It also lacked a willingness to try to negotiate with Serbia, an attitude matched by the FRY leadership. In 1997, young people were not willing any more to accept the ban of public demonstrations by the leadership that considered public action as too dangerous, and held mass demonstrations. About the same time, an armed movement had emerged, called the UCK (Kosovo Liberation Army). Its first attacks on police stations and on Albanians whom they considered collaborators with Serbia began in 1996. By 1997 the violence was undeniable, although in October 1997 there was still also nonviolent activism, like student demonstrations for the re-opening of the university and schools.

⁸² For a description of the nonviolent resistance, see Clark 2000.

In 1998 the UCK became more and more the real power factor. By mid-June it temporarily controlled large areas in central Kosovo, rapidly retreating in the face of a summer offensive by FRY security forces. Contrary to the reports in Western media, the fighting in 1998 was a confrontation of the Yugoslav Army with the UCK. There was no attempt at systematic 'ethnic cleansing' as has often been claimed by Western politicians trying to legitimate the NATO-war of 1999, though most victims were civilians and the numbers of IDPs rose to between 230,000 and more than 400,000 (see Hamilton and Man 1998, Schweitzer 1998, Loquai 2000). Under a massive threat by NATO to intervene, the fighting between the Serb forces and the UCK was suspended in autumn, and a large-scale civilian observer mission by the OSCE sent to Kosovo. But in early 1999, violence was on the rise once again. On the one side, the UCK had retaken control over those areas it had already controlled in summer 1998, and on the other the Yugoslav Army probably got ready for another offensive after the end of the war.

A coalition of Western States called for negotiations in Rambouillet in which they sought agreement from both sides to put Kosovo under international administration. When these negotiations failed, NATO attacked on 24 March, first with the explanation that it wanted to force Milosevic to sign the Rambouillet agreement, then claiming it wanted to prevent ethnic cleansing and a 'humanitarian catastrophe' which in fact it had just caused (Marcon 2000:41, Lutz 2001).

The war in 1999 cost the lives of an estimated 7,000-11,000 Albanians and 1,200-2,000 Serb civilians.⁸³ The number of Serbian soldiers killed is estimated at around 1,000. More than 850,000 Albanians left Kosovo, up to 600,000 were internally displaced. After the war 125,000 out of a total population of 200,000 ethnic Serbs left Kosovo, since then even more have gone. The same is true for other minority groups such as Roma and Ashkali. (For these figures, see Daalder and O'Hanlon 2000:3, Lampe 2000:408, Buckely and Cummings 2001:1, Dannreuther 2001:26, O'Neill 2002:15, CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects 2006:4).⁸⁴

After the cease-fire the UN and NATO together with a larger number of other international organisations and institutions set up a protectorate with NATO as its peace-keeping arm (KFOR), and the UN as civil administrator (UNMIK).

While the physical reconstruction has gone ahead quickly, there has been very little change on the other fronts. The economic situation is disastrous and again, as in the 1990s, many people have started to migrate to other countries as cheap labour force in order to feed their families. Serbs have regrouped, living mainly in enclaves and even there found themselves insecure as three days of ethnic violence in March 2004 proved in which 19 people died, nearly 1000 were injured, perhaps 4,000 Serbs driven from their homes, and several hundred houses burned. These incidents also showed that neither NATO nor the newly-created multiethnic police of Kosovo were equipped (or perhaps willing) to quell the unrest (see International Crisis Group 2004a, CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects 2006).

For a long time, the status question of Kosovo remained unresolved, the international community arguing that 'standards came before status'. After unsuccessful EU-led negotiations in 2007, however, Kosovo declared its independence in spite of bitter resistance by Serbia and its ally Russia in February 2008, and was quickly recognized by a number of relevant countries, among them most EU members as well as neighbouring countries.⁸⁵

⁸³ Human Rights Watch which is the only NGO that researched all military incidents involving civilian victims came to a figure of 500 Yugoslav civilians killed (Human Rights Watch 2000).

⁸⁴ Before the war there had been up to 155,000 Roma and Ashkali, of whom more than 100,000 have been displaced.

⁸⁵ Until November 2008, Kosovo has been recognised by 51 of the 192 U.N. member states, among them 22 members of the European Union and the USA. (Karajkov 2008)

3.6 Macedonia: From an Example of ‘Working Prevention’ to Armed Uprising

Macedonia’s (official name till today: ‘Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia’ - FYROM) path to independence was thorny because of the resistance its neighbour Greece put up. Greece expressed concerns that Macedonia had territorial claims, and disliked the use of antique symbols which it considered its own.⁸⁶ It set up a trade embargo which harmed Macedonia’s economy quite a lot. Only in April 1993 was Macedonia accepted into the United Nations and simultaneously recognised by most EC countries. To prevent Macedonia from being drawn into the wars of the neighbouring countries, a UN peace-keeping force and later a long-term OSCE mission were deployed, and throughout the 1990s Macedonia was considered a successful example of conflict prevention (see Ackermann 2000 and Lund 2000).

Greece lifted its embargo after US mediator Holbrooke managed to get an agreement between the two governments during his shuttle tours to end the Bosnian war in September 1995. This agreement then opened up Macedonian membership of the OSCE, the Council of Europe and the NATO Partnership for Peace. In 1996, also a trade and cooperation agreement with the EU was concluded.

The second half of the 1990s was characterised by some tensions with the Albanian minority, particularly in the context of the Kosovo crisis and war. In spring 1999, Macedonia had (rather unwillingly) become host to about 344.000 Albanian refugees from Kosovo.

In 2001 unrest in the Western parts of Macedonia, inhabited by a large Albanian minority, escalated to violence. Macedonia first tried to deal with the insurgency by military means. When this failed and the fear of a second Kosovo became predominant, EU, NATO and OSCE stepped up their mediating efforts and managed to conclude the so-called Ohrid agreement signed on 13 August 2001.⁸⁷

While the number of casualties was low compared with the other violent conflicts (around 400 dead), the crisis in Macedonia 2001 temporarily displaced about 150,000 people, the majority of whom fled to Kosovo, but most were able to return quickly (Wilkinson 2001).

⁸⁶ The name Macedonia, and Macedonia’s flag with the Macedonian star.

⁸⁷ For an overview over the events of 2001, see Gallagher 2005.

In March 2004 Macedonia applied for EU membership and like Croatia is close to concluding the steps needed to join NATO but has not been issued an invitation yet because Greece is blocking its membership (International Crisis Group 2009).

3.7 Conclusion

The discussion about the causes of the conflicts leading to war in former Yugoslavia took place inside the countries concerned as much as outside (see Cox 1998:7pp and Kaufman 2001:4 pp). The debate among the citizens of former Yugoslavia focused on the question whether the wars were ‘wars of aggression’ by Serbia/Yugoslavia, and the Yugoslav People’s Army an occupation force (although it had been in all republics before secession), or if they were ‘civil wars’ which was usually equated with the term ‘ethnic conflict’.⁸⁸ The international debate partly mirrored this discussion but also offered some other explanations of which only a few can be mentioned here.

The interpretation as an ethnic conflict has been popular among Western observers, often considering the wars as expression of deep-rooted and intractable antagonisms handed down through the generations until a liberating ethno-nationalist explosion blew off the heavy lid from an over-heated ‘boiling cauldron’ caused by the suppression of ethnic conflict during Tito’s time (see Kaplan 1993, Glenny 1996).⁸⁹

An explanation favoured by many critical and anti-nationalist scholars both from the region and outside has focused on power struggles of nationalist leaders who appeared in the wake of the breakdown of Communism, and who resorted to violent conflict along ethnic lines to keep their opponents from mobilising the population against the regime itself (see Licht and Kaldor 1992, Stubbs 1999).

⁸⁸ For comments on the first view, see for example Christiakis 1996:51, Dizdarevic 1992, Woodward 1995:257pp. Also US ambassador Zimmermann makes this point. (Zimmermann 1996:143).

⁸⁹ However it has to be observed that these conceptions usually display a simplistic understanding of ethnicity as something primordial and not subjected to manipulation. The existence of political leaders claiming that the problems their society faces originated in the existence of antagonistic ethnic groups, referring to historical events (including traumas) to strengthen the ethnic/national identity, using ethnic identity to promote political and representative claims, artificially strengthening a separate identity by reforming language and introducing separate cultural symbols – in short, all that could be observed in the former Yugoslavia can be described as characteristics of ethnic conflict without going back to assumptions on the primordality or instrumental character ethnicity and nation. (See for the discussion between ‘primordialists’ and ‘instrumentalists’ Shils 1957, Geertz 1963, Glazer and Moynihan 1963 and 1975, Narroll 1964, van den Berghe 1978, Cohen 1978, Tilley 1997:509, Banton 2001).

Another explanation associated with Susan L. Woodward (1995) explains the development of violent conflict at the beginning of the 1990s as the result of a deep economic and political crisis in the area. In the economic field, the long-lasting inflation and the economic reforms undertaken to deal with the crisis caused civic unrest, and competition between the republics. When in the wake of the breakdown of the political systems in Eastern Europe in 1989 the (already weakened) leadership of the League of Communists had to give way to multi-party systems, the transition of the constitutional order, including its social and economic rights to another order led to disintegration of governmental authority and breakdown of a political and civil order.⁹⁰

Stuart J. Kaufman offers a synthetic ‘symbolic politics theory of ethnic war’:

The symbolic politics theory holds that if the three preconditions – hostile myths, ethnic fears, and opportunity – are present, ethnic war results if they lead to rising mass hostility, chauvinist mobilisation by leaders making extreme symbolic appeals, and a security dilemma between groups. Different kinds of triggering events work by activating either the hostility or chauvinist mobilisation (Kaufman 2001:34).

According to him “people choose by responding to the most emotionally potent symbol evoked” (Kaufman 2001:28). Nationalist myths of Serbs and Croats encouraged mutual hostility as did memory of violence during World War II.

Chauvinist mobilisation by leaders in order to build coalitions was based on making other Yugoslav peoples scapegoats for the problems of their own populations.

Economic rivalries and declining living standards deepened the crisis. This created also a security dilemma which led ethnic groups to mobilise against each other.

⁹⁰ A related explanation is offered by Schierup (1999a and 1999b). He believes that the economic reforms in the 1970s, rather than modernising the socialist system, led to growing autonomy of republics and weakening of the federation. According to him, by 1980 the republics were already beginning to look and act like small nation-states. Local party leaders and managers attempted to maintain legitimacy by continuing to provide employment and social services despite worsening economic conditions. In competition with the others, each republic, often at the level of the individual enterprise, tried to forge links with international companies. The deepening crisis tended to reinforce local relations and kinship ties. Urban-rural links were strengthened, republican structures were ‘blended organically with the most authoritarian features of the social and political relations of real socialism’. The local party elites and the increasingly ‘national’ working classes were to be bound together by innumerable ties of an increasingly traditional character. These were displayed in idioms such as kinship, friendship, locality and ethnicity, taking the form of a complex network of reciprocal favours (see also Duffield 2001:169).

Most of the different explanations sketched above seem to contain some element of truth. This also matches the general discussion on causes of armed conflicts that also seems to come to the conclusion that conflict cannot be reduced to a single cause, or a single explanation.⁹¹ It is obvious that there are "very few necessary conditions" which need to be fulfilled in order for a war to develop, and very many sufficient conditions, of which only a few of these may apply, in any single conflict. War is possible as soon as weapons are available with which to fight it and as long as there is a dispute between two or more parties. What makes war probable, however, is a far more complicated question (Smith 2000:4).

Smith proposes to distinguish background causes, mobilisation strategies, triggers and catalysts.⁹² Using this concept, amongst the main background causes one might refer to:

- A history of ethnic conflict going back at least to the first Yugoslavia, and the fear of which led to the suppression of expression of ethnic identity during Tito's time, which in turn radicalised certain elements of society in all republics.
- The economic problems of Yugoslavia which were experienced differently in different regions / republics (depending on the degree of industrialisation, and access to foreign markets).
- The breakdown of the socialist regimes in 1989.
- A federative structure which favoured attempts to deal with these problems on a regional (republican) rather than the national level.

Mobilisation strategies were pursued at different levels:

⁹¹ The research on causes of armed conflict in general so far has not produced a consistent theory acceptable to most scholars working in the field. There are different categories of explanations: genetic and evolutionary/biological theories (aggression as a genetic function, maximisation of survival chances), behaviourist theories (war as learned behaviour), cost-benefit theories (maximisation of benefit), ecological explanations (war for scarce resources), social/cultural theories (ethnicity and/or religion as conflict causes), and cognitive (attitudes) explanations (see Orywal 1996 and Smith 2001 for overviews over the different theories).

⁹² He refers to David Dressler's model whose terminology he slightly changed. It distinguishes five causal roles: A reason ('historical problems'), a trigger, a target (the objective of an actor), a channel (lien of political, social economic or national cleavage to design group identities), and catalysts (any factors that control the rate, intensity, and duration of a conflict). See Baechler 2002:8pp.

- Party leaders in the republics re-defined politics in national rather than in socialist terms in order to rally people to their support, and to protect particular interests of their republic or region.
- After the political changes of 1989, democratisation which was mainly defined as introduction of several parties added to the diversification of the political picture.
- Nationalisation of politics in turn caused radicalisation of those ethnic groups and resistance – mostly at a very regional level – by those who experienced or feared exclusion because they did not belong to the nation in question. They responded by seeking autonomy or inclusion into the ‘home country’ from which they were divided by a republican border.
- The moves by Milosevic to bring Kosovo, the Vojvodina and Montenegro under his control which probably can mainly be explained by the power politics of an over-ambitious man and his followers, and the dynamics which these moves caused (alienation of the Western republics etc).
- The first multi-party elections in 1990 in all republics and their results which led to disruption of the functioning of central institutions at the federation level.

All this in hindsight can be seen as clear warning signals that violent conflict might develop, but they in themselves do not explain why the wars then began when they did. For that triggers were needed. The main triggers of the escalation, meaning factors that affected the timing of the onset of the armed conflict, included:

- The declaration of independence by Slovenia and Croatia against the will of the central government and the (at that time still predominantly Yugoslav-oriented) army leadership.
- Once the Yugoslav People’s Army (JNA) was used in Slovenia in an attempt to prevent secession, local tensions and limited violence in Croatia (and parts of Bosnia as well although this was hardly noticed at that time) fell into the pattern of Belgrade (“the Serbs”) and the JNA going to war against the secessionists, and led to a violent reaction by the new Croatian government and its fledgling army, whose actions (blockade of the JNA barracks) then escalated the conflict further.
- For the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina the trigger was the completed secession of Croatia and Slovenia and the internationally-promoted referendum on independence which left the three-nation republic caught between two stools: Croats looked towards Croatia, Serbs identified with Serbia and rejected a separation from it, and the Muslims without a 'home nation' outside Bosnia were in between.

Catalysts, factors that influence the intensity and duration of a conflict, may have been:

- The second Gulf War at the beginning of 1991 had set a precedent for internationally sanctioned and successful military intervention. I remember discussions in 1991 that Belgrade and the JNA assumed that their intervention in Slovenia would be tolerated in the same way as the US-led UN intervention in Iraq was.
- The speed in which the conflicts became violent may be explained by what Matveeva and Paes (2003) call a "gun culture", referring to popular attitudes of general acceptance towards guns in societies where many people owned hunting rifles, as well as having access to other weapons in their capacity as members of the Territorial Defence.
- Pre-existing local conflicts which then fell into the pattern of the wider war.
- The UN arms embargo which initially clearly favoured those who inherited the weapons kept by the JNA – meaning mainly the Serbian armed forces in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

To sum up, what kind of wars were these? Civil war, wars of secession, international wars? I would reply: all of the above. The wars of secession in Croatia and Slovenia became an international conflict formally as soon as these republics were recognised internationally. Yet in Croatia there was a strong element of civil war still remaining because it was not the JNA occupying Croatia, but rather local Serbs seeking autonomy from Croatia led the struggle. Bosnia had an even stronger character of civil war, in spite of the international element, through the barely disguised involvement by Serbian and Croatian troops, military materiel and money.

4. The Main Interventions by Governments and International Organisations

The course of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia described in the last chapter was heavily shaped by the interventions of the international (state) community. It is necessary to give an overview of their interventions before coming to the instruments and activities of the civil society actors, because in many ways the state actors set the framework in which the civil society groups acted. It would also distort the overall picture of the events in the region in the decade studied if the focus on civil society actors resulted in under-emphasising what was in many ways the much heavier impact and influence of international organisations and governments.

4.1 The Use of Peace-making Instruments

In chapter 2, peace-making was defined with Ryan (1995) as working as an external party towards a settlement of the conflict through either law, negotiation, or the exercise of violence and/or other forms of power.

4.1.1 Peace-making by Law

In the period under study, peace-making by law played almost no role in the former Yugoslavia. Of course principles of international law were invoked many times, both in the context of appeals and decisions of the UN Security Council and in humanitarian activities (for example the protection of prisoners of war). However, these and other applications of international law, such as the establishment of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY), belong under peace-building: their purpose was not to find a solution to the conflict. As for national laws, there have been many reforms in the successor states to Yugoslavia, including measures to protect minority rights, but they all came after the wars and therefore are also better placed in the context of the post-war institution- and state-building.

4.1.2 Peace-making by Negotiation

4.1.2.1 The Structures of Negotiation Diplomacy

As for peace-making by negotiation, the organisational framework was first set by the European Community.⁹³ After the Brioni conferences in July and August 1991 successfully dealt with the armed conflict in Slovenia, the EC created a new conference to settle the war in Croatia. On 7 September 1991 the so-called Hague Conference or 'EC Conference on Yugoslavia in The Hague' (ECCY) was opened, chaired by the EC's special envoy Lord Carrington, but proved unable to reach any lasting agreements (see Lucarelli 2000:24). Frequent cease-fires were agreed and usually broken within a couple of days. The Conference was suspended in November and on 8 November EC foreign ministers agreed limited economic sanctions against Yugoslavia. With the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina, in August 1992 the ECCY was revived and enlarged into the 'International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia' (ICFY), being co-chaired by the EC/ EU (David Owen succeeding Carrington as envoy) and the United Nations (initially Cyrus Vance).⁹⁴ ICFY provided the framework in which between 1992 and the end of 1993 a number of peace plans for Bosnia-Herzegovina were developed. It also handled other issues in the region (Kosovo, Macedonia, Croatia), achieving some positive outcomes (see Rossanet 1996 for a description of its work).⁹⁵

In 1994 a newly formed Contact Group consisting of USA, Britain, France, Russia and Germany assumed leadership in dealing with the Bosnia war, replacing ICFY in this role.⁹⁶ Between 1994 and the Kosovo war in 1999, the Contact Group, in spite of ⁹³ The European Community (EC) became the European Union (EU) in 1993.

⁹⁴ Invited were the 12 EC member countries, the five permanent members of the UN Security Council, Japan and Canada for the 'Group of 7', Czechoslovakia and Sweden for the CSCE, Sweden, Switzerland (as a host of many humanitarian organisations), Senegal (for the Organisation of Islamic Conference), Turkey and Indonesia (as future coordinators of the Non-Aligned Movement), representatives of the neighbours of the former Yugoslavia and representatives of all six former Yugoslav republics. FR Yugoslavia was present with its President (Milosevic) and Prime Ministers (who varied over the period) in a personal capacity after the status of FR Yugoslavia became unclear. Kosovo Albanians were invited as observers. See Owen 1995, Rossanet 1996, Sloan 1998:21 and 46, Clark 2000:90 and 239; Kaufman 2002: xv, Woodward 1995:302pp.

⁹⁵ ICFY established six Working Groups: Bosnia-Herzegovina; Humanitarian Issues; Ethnic and National Communities and Minorities; Succession Issues; Economic Issues; Confidence and Security-building and Verification measures.

⁹⁶ The Contact Group had no contractual agreements as basis, and used only informal rules of cooperation (see Schwegmann 2003). Italy joined it in 1996.

its internal problems caused by very different views and the members' regional alliances, has remained the main international coordination body dealing with the conflicts (see Schwegmann 2003).

4.1.2.2 The Contents of Negotiation Diplomacy

As described in Chapter 3.2, the EC and the USA in autumn of 1991 began to accept the dissolution of Yugoslavia and sought to contain the conflict by developing 'objective' criteria and processes for recognition of the separatist republics.⁹⁷ In October the Hague Conference decided to suspend any decision on this issue for two months, and the EC established an Arbitration Commission of international lawyers (the so-called Badinter Commission) to make recommendations regarding the status of Yugoslavia and conditions for recognition. At the end of November, the Badinter Commission declared Yugoslavia to be in a state of dissolution, and on 11 January 1992 made its final report. This stated that Slovenia fulfilled the conditions defined by the Commission for independence. Croatia and Macedonia were asked to adjust their Constitutional Laws, and Bosnia-Herzegovina was asked to conduct a referendum. The application by Kosovo was denied on the grounds that Kosovo had not been a republic of Yugoslavia, as were similar applications by Krajina Serbs and Bosnian Serbs, although the Commission stated that these groups were entitled to enjoy minority rights. Yet even before this Commission report, the EC had decided to recognise Slovenia and Croatia, and 'unofficially' Germany already recognised Slovenia and Croatia on 23 December, arguing that the EC had already decided to do so. Macedonia was not immediately recognised, however, because of a veto by Greece which suspected Macedonia of having territorial claims against Greece. (For what was described here, see Genscher 1995:954, Gow 1997:56, Libal 1997:65, Burg and Shoup 1999:83, Lucarelli 2000:27 and 126, Markovic 2000:30.)

⁹⁷ To my knowledge and contradicting some of the myths of leftist factions of the peace movement that perceived an international conspiracy to break up one of the last strongholds of socialism, there was little official sympathy for the secession of Croatia and Slovenia before their declaration of independence in summer 1991, aside from some Catholic circles (Libal 1997:11, Eisermann 2000:33). However, the situation changed quickly once the armed conflict began. Germany and Austria were among the first to begin talking about the possibility of recognition. Mostly it was expressed in the context of 'if the war does not stop, then we would have to consider recognition'. This attitude was read in the secessionist republics as support for their independence, and it seems that Germany already at the beginning of July proposed at a meeting of the Council of Ministers in the Hague that the EC could collectively recognise Slovenia and Croatia (see Genscher 1995:938, Woodward 1995:178, Libal 1997:16, 39pp and 52pp, Lucarelli 2000:124, Radan 2002:164).

Leaving aside the contentious issue of the internal politics and interests of the Western countries, the main international objective in regard handling the conflicts in former Yugoslavia was the containment of the crisis and specially the prevention of large refugee movements (see Gallagher 2003). The approach on which by end of 1991 most countries agreed was to internationalise the conflict. By the recognition of independence of Slovenia and Croatia, the conflicts were transformed from an internal to an international issue which was (at that time) a precondition for the UN to send peace-keeping forces, which in turn were an important factor of the cease-fire agreement concluded on Croatia in January 1992 (see Libal 1997:86pp, Holbrooke 1998:31pp, Kaufman 2000:xiv, 76; Lampe 2000:372, Lucarelli 2000:20,28 and 135pp).

Whilst recognition may have helped end the war in Croatia, it must also be considered one of the triggers for the war that started only four months later in Bosnia-Herzegovina. As described in chapter 3, Bosnia-Herzegovina was recognised on 6 April 1992, although despite the firm opposition expressed by Serbs in the March referendum the Serbs. Inclusion in the EC-orchestrated process of dissolution of Yugoslavia left Bosnia-Herzegovina suspended between the Serbian-dominated rest of Yugoslavia and newly independent Croatia.⁹⁸

In the period that followed, the EC and the UN tried to end the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina by proposing different structural models for that country, all based on ethnically defined territories and thereby involuntarily mirroring the military development on the ground where so-called ethnic cleansing was in the process of creating mono-ethnic areas.⁹⁹ Even before the creation of ICFY and the beginning of ⁹⁸ The recognition of Bosnia-Herzegovina on the 6-7 April was pushed by the USA more than by the EC. The USA argued that the recognition was necessary because Croatia and Serbia planned to divide Bosnia among themselves, and both EC and USA hoped by their recognition to deter war (see Zimmermann 1996:18pp, Gow 1997:89pp, Libal 1997:93, Lampe 2000:78 and 364, Kaufmann 2002). Bosnian President Izetbegovic obviously saw that coming and pleaded with Western countries to wait with the recognition when he met with Genscher in December 1991 (see Woodward 1995:261). That it triggered the war was later recognised even by US mediator Holbrooke, though he – probably correctly- argues that the war was likely to have begun anyway (Holbrooke 1998:31pp). This is also the point of view of Gow (1997:34), Lucarelli (2000:129) and Gallagher (2003:72pp).

⁹⁹ Before the war, there had been few mono-ethnic areas in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina there had been a proposal to create three constituent units within Bosnia-Herzegovina, brought forward by Cutilheiro for the EC (see Krech 1997:48 and 65, Burg and Shoup 1999:109, Markovic 2000:36). This plan failed, despite initially seeming to have chances for acceptance, and in the first months of war, the ICFY in different rounds of negotiations developed the Vance-Owen Peace Plan (VOPP) at the end of 1992.

VOPP proposed a regionalisation of Bosnia-Herzegovina into ten cantons. But the parties, especially the Bosnian government and the Bosnian Serbs, disagreed with (different) part of the plan until eventually the negotiators had to abandon it after a referendum conducted by the Bosnian Serbs in May 1993 emphatically rejected it (Sloan 1998:50, Lucarelli 2000:45, Kaufman 2002:98).¹⁰⁰ The next plan - the Owen-Stoltenberg Plan - reverted to the three-entity model, trying to be closer to the reality on the ground, and suggested a confederation or union with three ethnically defined constituents (see Owen 1995:xvii and 193pp, Krech 1997:92, Burg and Shoup 1999:263pp).¹⁰¹ However, this was also quickly rejected because the parties could not agree on the borders and the percentages of territory each of them would get. The European Union and ICFY then for some time tried to continue the negotiations varying the Plan and its percentages a bit (European Union Action Plan) but also failed (Owen 1995:238pp, Sloan 1998:55, Giersch 1998:167). The Contact Group, which began its work in 1994 after the Federation between Croats and Bosniaks was created, then proposed in summer 1994 a union of two states which more than twelve months later basically became the model for Dayton (see Calic 1996:188pp, Markovic 2000:153pp, Kaufman 2002: xvii, Schneckener 2002:112).

The different structural options proposed by the international community have been criticised in at least three regards (see Owen 1995:62, Burg and Shoup 1999:218pp, Lampe 2000:377, Lucarelli 2000:42, Markovic 2000:181pp, Kaufman 2002: xv, Ducasse-Rogier 2003:58pp and 96 pp):

- The peace plans applied the logic of ‘one territory - one ethnic group’ which was at cross-purposes with the ideals of modern democracy (see Schneckener 2002 for a discussion of structural options available in civil wars).

¹⁰⁰ The Bosnian Serbs controlled at that time around 70% of the territory but the Plan allotted them only 43%.

¹⁰¹ Thorvald Stoltenberg replaced Cyrus Vance as co-chair of ICFY in April 1993.

- A division by ethnic group was the logic of at least two of the warring parties, and thereby the proposals seemed to strengthen and confirm the purposes for which they had gone to war,
- On the ground new peace plans and the maps accompanying them often led to the intensification of fighting, including contributing to the break-up of the original Croat-Muslim alliance.

Some years later, the international community took a very different approach to the conflict in Kosovo. Prior to 2007, international bodies were very hesitant to make a final decision on the status of Kosovo, instead insisting that first issues of democratisation, economic stability, rule of law, a dialogue with Belgrade and minority rights were to be resolved (see Knoll and Molina 2002). If this was partly a lesson drawn from the 1990s, the conclusion was not necessarily correct: insecurity about the future was itself a factor increasing “the political temperature in the province and arguably contributed to an increase in ethnically motivated violence” as Llamazares and Reynolds Levy concluded after surveying 21 humanitarian, development and peace organisations in Kosovo (Llamazares and Reynolds Levy 2003:10).

4.1.3 The Role of Violence and Power

Peace-making by negotiation and peace-making by violence or power can be quite hard to distinguish, at least in the cases of the wars in Bosnia-Herzegovina between 1992 and 1995, and Kosovo in 1998 and 1999. In both cases the negotiations were accompanied by pressure through sanctions and soon also by a threat and execution of air bombing to a degree that eventually went far beyond the negotiation techniques of ‘sticks and carrots’.

4.1.3.1 The Sanctions

Sanctions have been an important instrument used by international state actors to support their peace-making efforts, either by withdrawing means needed for the continuation of the conflict, and/ or by putting pressure on the targeted side to lay down their arms and come to a peace agreement.¹⁰² In July 1991 the EC declared an arms embargo on all Yugoslavia, and in September this was adopted by the UN in Security Council Resolution (UNSCR) 713. The embargo was monitored by the Western European Union (WEU) and NATO (see Leurdijk 1996:28, 228; Meder and Reimann 1996:5pp).¹⁰³

Until 1995, the arms embargo was the focus of much political controversy because it implicitly treated all sides in the conflicts as equal. The USA, the Organisation of Islamic Conference (OIC), and also many civil society groups – as well as Croatia and the government of Bosnia-Herzegovina itself – argued that the embargo violated the right of Muslims and Croats to self-defence (see for example Sloan 1998:50, Markovic 2000:104pp, Clark 2001:37, Kaufman 2002:100).¹⁰⁴

A second military sanction was the establishment of a no-fly zone over Bosnia in 1992, monitored by UNPROFOR, and from 1993 on partly enforced by NATO (UNSCR 757 and 781, see Owen 1995:298, Sloan 1998:22, Lucarelli 2000:39 and 176, Kaufman 2002:xv).

Economic sanctions started right after the declaration of independence of Slovenia and Croatia in May 1991 with the freezing of economic assistance to Yugoslavia by the EC and the USA.¹⁰⁵ When the war in Croatia began, both quickly threatened economic sanctions. In late October 1991 the EC decided to terminate its agreement on cooperation and trade, and this was soon to be followed by other countries.¹⁰⁶ In ¹⁰² Skidelsky and Mortimer see sanctions as one 'link in a chain of graduated pressure short of war', more powerful than diplomatic pressure but less powerful than military preparation (Skidelsky and Mortimer 1996:154). See also De Jonge Oudraat (2001:232) on economic sanctions, and the report 'Responsibility to Protect' (2001:30p) for a list of types of sanctions distinguishing sanctions in a military, economic and political/ diplomatic area.

¹⁰³ Between November 1992 and the end of 1995, 63,000 vessels were checked, with 833 diverted to Italian ports (see Pirani and Zucchoni 2001:50pp).

¹⁰⁴ When in 1993 the US Congress voted to lift the arms embargo, President Clinton vetoed that decision.

¹⁰⁵ Actually there were measures that can be considered economic sanctions of a more informal type already in 1990 when the USA withdrew an implicit offer of financial aid. See Gow 1997:208, Woodward 1995:384, 'Jugoslawien will Schulden stunden' 1991.

¹⁰⁶ The EC concretely mentioned the suspension of the Economic Co-operation Treaty and the expulsion of Yugoslavia from the list of preferred nations if hostilities were not ended within days. Sanctions declared in November 1991 also included an oil embargo by the UN. Bosnia, Macedonia, Slovenia and Croatia were exempted from the sanctions already in late 1991, as was Montenegro in January 1992. See Genscher 1995:957p, Stremlau 1996:25pp, Gow 1997:52, Libal 1997:14 and 69; Sloan 1998:49, Weller 1999:17, Lucarelli 2000:19pp, Markovic 2000:19, 28pp and 71, Pirani and Zucconi 2001:48, Kaufman 2002:99 and 130.

the next two years, in the face of the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina, these sanctions were targeted at Serbia, and tightened several times, until in the end there was an almost total embargo on all trade, traffic and cultural relations.¹⁰⁷ The objective was to isolate Serbia which was considered to have control over the Bosnian Serbs, and thereby the key to a cease-fire in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Indeed, it was only in 1994 that the Bosnian Serbs were directly targeted by the UN. UNSCR 942 prohibited states from admitting into their territories Bosnian Serb officials and military officers forbade trade with any entity owned or controlled by Bosnian Serbs, and froze financial assets held abroad. During the last months of 1994, the EU tried a stick and carrot tactic by offering to gradually lift sanctions if the Serbs agreed to territorial concessions demanded by the Bosnian government (see Giersch 1998:167, Sloan 1998:55).

Most of these sanctions were ended in early 1996, with only a so-called 'outer wall of sanctions' against FR Yugoslavia maintained because of the situation in Kosovo.¹⁰⁸ However, sanctions on FR Yugoslavia were reintroduced in early 1998 in response to the violence in Kosovo in form of a new arms embargo, an oil embargo, an embargo on other equipment 'that could be used for repression', denial of visa for FR Yugoslavia representatives, and a moratorium of export credits. During the war in 1999, with UNSCR 1160 and UNSCR 1199 additional sanctions were added, such as a total ban on export goods and any financial transactions with persons or companies in FR Yugoslavia, and the freezing of funds and assets. Their last remnants were finally lifted after the fall of Milosevic in 2000 (see Mueller 1999:68, Buckley 2001:157, Kaufman 2002:xx, Pavlovic 2002:286, United Nations 2002).¹⁰⁹

The sanctions against Serbia weakened its economy considerably and, as was often remarked, critically hit its citizens probably more than its government.¹¹⁰ The

¹⁰⁷ The Resolutions in question were: UNSCR 757 on the economic and cultural sanctions, UNSCR 787 prohibiting transportation of oil, petroleum and coal through Serbia, and authorising NATO and WEU to search naval vessels, and UNSCR 820 freezing financial assets of Yugoslavia, and turning the sanctions into a blockade.

¹⁰⁸ Preventing FR Yugoslavia's return to World Bank and IMF. See Judah 2002:125, Kaufman 2002:154.

¹⁰⁹ However, in the next years especially the USA have threatened with economic sanctions several times more in the context of their demand to extradite Milosevic and Mladic. See Borden 2001, Cvijanovic 2001a, b and c, Stephen 2003.

¹¹⁰ Already in October 1993 the report of the ICFY Humanitarian Working Group warned of the destructive effects of sanctions, estimating that 50% of the FR Yugoslavia citizens were without damage between 1991 and 1994 alone was estimated to be slightly above US$45 billion. Hyperinflation was such that the government had to introduce a new currency in order to halt it (Babic 2001).¹¹¹ As to their effectiveness, most analysts believe that they played a role in ending the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina by making Belgrade change its policy towards the Bosnian Serbs, but others, such as Woodward, have questioned their significance (Woodward, 2005). Moreover, opposition groups in Serbia have expressed the opinion that the sanctions strengthened the regime rather than weakened it (see de Jonge Oudraat 2001, Dragovic-Soso 2003:120pp).

4.1.3.2 The Use of Military Means

The military engagement in Bosnia-Herzegovina grew slowly over the years. UNPROFOR was neither permitted nor equipped to enforce its mandate, or even protect itself in some circumstances.¹¹² In 1993 NATO was asked to give 'close air support' to the peace-keeping mission, although permission for any air attacks had to be obtained from the UN.¹¹³ The first tactic was to attack only weapon sites deemed to be firing on protected zones (so-called 'smoking gun targets'). The discussion on escalating air strikes continued through 1994. When in 1995 'close air support' was considered no longer effective, the UN Security Council (in UNSCR 958) asked NATO air forces to undertake all necessary measures to support UNPROFOR and allow the fulfilment of its mandate. Air strikes were undertaken to serve as warnings or threats to make the warring parties comply with the UN rulings, and in this context NATO created a list of military targets. In May 1995 NATO attacked several adequate means of support. See Christiakis 1998, Markovic 2000:188.

¹¹¹ As a side effect, also the neighbouring countries (Greece, Macedonia, Bulgaria, Rumania, Hungary) suffered losses of several billion of US$ each (Calic 1996:168p).

¹¹² In 1994 and 1995, many soldiers were taken hostage by the Bosnian Serb Forces. See Meder and Reimann 1996:22, Krech 1997:130, Burg and Shoup 1999:329, Ripley 1999:107pp, Hillen 2000:177, Lucarelli 2000:65, Markovic 2000:203, Clark 2001:49.

¹¹³ The USA propagated from 1992 on a strategy of 'lift and strike', meaning to lift the arms embargo against Bosnia-Herzegovina and conduct air strikes. This was however rejected by those countries who contributed to UNPROFOR, fearing for the security of their peace-keepers. See Owen 1995:xiii and 159pp, Meder and Reimann 1996:10, Sloan 1998:50, Markovic 2000:70, Clark 2001:37, Kaufman 2002:100.

times but stopped its bombing when up to 500 UNPROFOR soldiers were taken hostage by the Bosnian Serbs (see Ripley 1999).¹¹⁴

The third step of escalation was decided in the face of the fall of the UN protected enclaves Zepa and Srebrenica in July 1995 and the wish to protect the remaining enclave of Gorazde. Russia managed to convince the Bosnian Serbs not to attack Gorazde, but on 30 August 1995 a mortar attack on Sarajevo provided the trigger for NATO to implement 'Operation Deliberate Force'. This operation concentrated on more extended bombing of targets in or near UN-declared safe areas or military targets supporting forces besieging the safe areas (see Ripley 1999 for a detailed study on this operation). It focussed on Sarajevo, seeking to force the Serbs to withdraw their heavy weaponry from the area. The goal was to 'inflict pain' on the Bosnian Serb military by attacking key supporting facilities and bases. The bombing campaign was considered by the Holbrooke negotiation team as leverage for their parallel efforts to hammer out a peace agreement, though they themselves had no direct influence on the NATO activities. Most analysts give the bombing some credit (though not being the only factor) in forcing the Serbian side to eventually sign the Dayton Agreement (see Holbrooke 1998:146, Burg and Shoup 1999:334pp, Weiss 1999:12).

The second instance of the use of military means for 'peace enforcement' was in relation to Kosovo / Yugoslavia in 1998 and 1999. As described in chapter 3.5, the Albanian resistance against Serbian control of Kosovo had changed by 1998 from a nonviolent one to an armed uprising by the Kosovo Liberation Army UCK, and was met with heavy violence from the side of Serbian troops and Special Police. In the face of growing numbers of IDPs and refugees, by the end of September 1998 the USA and Britain started to threaten FR Yugoslavia with air strikes if the Serbian forces were not withdrawn from Kosovo. In the Contact Group, Russia announced that it would veto a UN Security Council decision sanctioning air strikes.¹¹⁵ NATO decided to go ahead on its own without a UN mandate and, when negotiations were stalled, NATO gave an activation order to its air force. Shortly before the end of an

¹¹⁴ On the military activities, see also Meder and Reimann 1996:20, de Jonge Oudraat 1999:66pp, Sloan 1998:31, Lucarelli 2000:64p, Markovic 2000:133, Kaufman 2002:xvii.

¹¹⁵ Russia has always been very critical of any actions taken against Yugoslavia and was considered an ally of Belgrade (see Buckley 2001).

ultimatum NATO had set, FR Yugoslavia agreed to withdraw its troops, and to allow the OSCE to monitor the cease-fire through a civilian Kosovo Verification Mission (KVM) (see Debiel 1999b, Weller 1999:22pp, Daalder and O'Hanlon 2000:46, Judah 2002:183).¹¹⁶

But soon after New Year 1999, there were clear indicators that violence would be resumed in Kosovo in the spring. Accompanied by repeated NATO threats to bomb Yugoslavia, the Contact Group called for negotiations that eventually were conducted in February 1999 in Rambouillet, France. The mediators there presented a proposal that included a cease-fire, autonomy, a three-year NATO peace-keeping force in Kosovo and a mechanism for finding a final political settlement for Kosovo while maintaining the territorial integrity of FR Yugoslavia (the latter two were rather contradictory, see Clark 2000:181, Dauphinee 2003, Wolff 2003:91pp). When the negotiations failed because Belgrade did not agree to the presented plan, NATO attacked – without a mandate by the UN Security Council - FR Yugoslavia on the 24 March.

Various reasons were given to justify this attack. According to General Wesley Clark (2001:185 and 205) it was to hit the Yugoslav military and police activities on the ground as rapidly and effectively as possible in order to degrade its capacity to continue repression of the civilian population, and to force President Milosevic to comply with the demands of the international community (meaning to sign the Rambouillet agreement). NATO Secretary-General Solana said one goal was to remove Milosevic from office (see Schaefer 1999, while the diplomat Grabert (1999), as well as other officials and media, spoke of the prevention of a humanitarian catastrophe. The circumstances and legitimisation of the attack are highly contentious and triggered vivid protests by civil society groups in most NATO countries. The lack of a UN mandate and the readiness to put all blame for the conflict on the Serbian side alone were the most important points here.¹¹⁷

¹¹⁶ Durward (2000:31) says: "In Ambassador Holbrooke's words, it was the credible threat of imminent NATO air strikes that induced Milosevic to comply." Also after the signing of the agreement, the NATO activation order remained standing and it was quite clear for all actors on the ground that to resume fighting would lead to NATO intervention (see Schweitzer 1999c).

¹¹⁷ One example of apparent one-sidedness is the handling of the so-called Racak massacre. The OSCE mission found in the village Racak in early January 1999 45 killed persons in civilian clothes and immediately blamed Serb forces for a massacre on civilians. Later forensic reports that in addition were kept partly secret were not able to remove doubts on the interpretation of the

When the bombings did not lead to a quick result, NATO escalated its air raids, and added more and more targets to its list (Clark 2001:317).¹¹⁸ NATO also began considering the sending of ground troops, but before a decision was made Belgrade gave in and opened negotiations on a ceasefire at the beginning of June leading to the eventual end of the bombing campaign (see Zitzlaff 1999:54, Daalder and O'Hanlon 2000:174, Kaufman 2002: xxii). Immediately after the ceasefire, on 11 June, NATO (and Russian) troops entered Kosovo, and Kosovo was put under international rule by the UN, with NATO-led KFOR as its military arm.

The NATO war on FR Yugoslavia has been subjected to very divergent political assessments. While NATO presented it as a successful case of peace enforcement to prevent much worse happening in Kosovo, for many critics – not only from the peace movements, leftist parties, and Russia but many international lawyers and politicians as well - it was a clear violation of international law, and guided by ulterior motives that had nothing to do with war or peace in Kosovo but with NATO's need to redefine its role after the end of the Cold War (see Chomsky 1999, Loquai 2000, Ronnefeldt 2001, and the contributions in Albrecht and Schaefer (eds.) 1999).¹¹⁹

There were at least two main factors that caused the failure of negotiation diplomacy that preceded the war: First there was a miscalculation from the side of the international community about the importance the Serbian regime gave to Kosovo - it seems that they expected Belgrade to give in as it had in 1995 regarding Bosnia. Secondly, it was an explicit part of the strategy of the Kosovo Albanians to bring killings. Another example is the claim that the Serbian side long before the war planned the 'ethnic cleansing' of Kosovo in an operation titled 'Horseshoe'. Some observers and researchers consider the existence of this plan a fact (for example Gallagher 2005:60pp. Gow 2003 discusses horseshoe, (2003:207-9), concluding that Operation Horseshoe was not the plan for ethnic cleaning, but insisting that there was an "operational plan for which Serbian forces were mobilized and waiting only for the signal to start." Others have expressed doubts on the authenticity of this paper that was allegedly discovered by German intelligence services or argue that it does not contain at all such a plan for ethnic cleansing (see Kalman 1999:135 and Loquai 2000).

¹¹⁸ Contrary to public claims, NATO bombed a number of civilian targets including schools, television stations, trains and historic monuments. A list of these targets has been compiled for a complaint before the War Crimes Tribunal by the American Association of Jurists together with jurists from Toronto (Pinter 2000). The use of depleted uranium in shells, and the bombing of oil refineries and chemical factories caused substantial health hazards throughout Serbia.

¹¹⁹ Some commentators suggest other motives of economic or strategic nature, some of these I find less convincing (access route to the oil in the Caspian Sea), and some blatantly far-fetched (Serbia being seen by US policy makers a potential centre of resistance to the US 'New World Order'). For these assumed objectives, see Chossudovsky 2006, Johnstone 2000:16, and the materials collected for a civil society tribunal on the NATO war ('Internationales Europäisches Tribunal ueber den NATO-Krieg gegen Jugoslawien' 2000).

about an international military intervention that would separate Kosovo from Serbia and thereby enable them to achieve the independence they had struggled for since the early 1990s, and consequently they had no reason to sustain the 1998 ceasefire (see Clark 2000, Layne 2000a:14, Lutz 2001, Judah 2002:103).

4.1.3.3 The Relationship Between Conflict Stage and Degree of Force Used

At first glance the review of the successes and failures in peace-making (see below) could be seen as evidence to support the assumption that the more a conflict escalates, the more pressure by the international negotiators is needed to secure an agreement.¹²⁰ Indeed, the negotiations on the Bosnian war between 1992 and 1995, and on the Kosovo war 1998-99, were accompanied by substantial pressure in the form of sanctions and threats of military action. So although officially NATO's bombing in Bosnia 1995 was legitimised by reference to the need to protect Sarajevo and other UN protected areas, Holbrooke (1998) in his account of the shuttle negotiations in summer-autumn 1995 is quite frank about his hope that NATO's intensified bombing would put pressure on President Milosevic to come to an agreement.

However, first impressions may be false, and indeed at second glance the story of the negotiations in the former Yugoslavia raises doubts about this assumption of a definite empirical link between 'showing muscle' and negotiation success:

- Generally speaking, there can be no doubt that in the case of Bosnia in summer 1995 the intervention of international parties was decisive, both in "helping to produce a new balance of forces on the ground and in pressuring parties to sign an agreement about which they were ambivalent at best" (Cousens and Cater 2001:26). Otherwise there would have been no negotiations and no treaty without the international intervention. But observers who studied the NATO bombing campaign argue that the military balance on the ground, and the joint Bosniak-Croat ground attack, were as decisive as NATO's bombing in creating a 'ripe moment' for the negotiations to succeed (see Burg and Shoup 1999:408pp, Ripley 1999, Schneckener 2002:45). Therefore, to attribute the success of Dayton solely to the NATO bombing is to overrate the significance of international military force in this case.

¹²⁰ This was found to be the common view of all negotiators who published their accounts. For a more theoretical assessment, see for example Clément 1997:10.

- On the other hand, the Washington Agreement of 1994, ending the war between Muslims and Croats in Bosnia-Herzegovina, seems to have been achieved without much negative pressure but rather with a promise by the USA to step up its military and perhaps also financial support after the end of the war. According to an interview reprinted in the magazine of the Helsinki Citizens Assembly at that time, the initiative for and the contents of this agreement did not even come from the USA at all but from a (Croat) member of the Bosnian Presidency, Prof. Dr. Ivo Komsic, who claims that he had to persuade people from the US Senate, Congress, State Department and Vice President Gore to support the suggested agreement (Radio Zid 1994).
- The same is true for the Erdut Agreement on Eastern Slavonia that prevented a new military offensive by Croatia: There was certainly some urgency on the part of international mediators, but again the agreement was reached without any clear threat to use military force.

Looking at these three examples, there is no clear relationship between level of escalation and degree of pressure exerted. Ripe moments and stalemates (Zartman and Touval 1985), ‘carrots’ and a feeling for the political possible seem to have played the decisive role. These findings are by no means conclusive – that would have needed a far more in-depth study than the survey done here. But I believe that the indicators found justify the call for a renewed study on the relation between force and negotiation.¹²¹

4.1.4 Peace-making: A Picture of Mixed Results

To conclude this section: in spite of the assessment that “almost no instrument fell so much into discredit as that of negotiation diplomacy” (Calic 1995:187, translation CS), there was a significant range of more-or-less successful peace-making initiatives.

¹²¹ An earlier version of this section 4.1.3.3 that was fundamentally rewritten for this purpose here has been submitted in the final report to the German Foundation Peace Research that funded the original study on which this thesis is based (Schweitzer 2005).

- In July-August of 1991 the EC 'troika' of current, former and future EC Presidencies had the lead in the negotiations to end the conflict in Slovenia. This led to a cease-fire agreement (Brioni Agreement) and the withdrawal of the Yugoslav army from Slovenia.¹²²
- In November 1991 the UN Secretary-General sent an envoy, Cyrus Vance, who succeeded where the EC had failed. On 23 November a cease-fire was agreed at the UN headquarters in Geneva between Milosevic, Tudjman and the Yugoslav Minister of Defence Kadijevic.¹²³ The fighting did not immediately stop, but on 28 November the JNA finally withdrew from Croatia after the Croatian army lifted its blockade of the JNA barracks. The cease-fire was finally signed on 2 January 1992, and the UN committed itself to send peace-keeping forces to Croatia.¹²⁴
- In September 1992 the EC monitors at local level, and ICFY at higher level negotiated the withdrawal of the JNA from Prevlaka (Croatia) and the subsequently demilitarisation of the peninsula (see Gow 1997:106).¹²⁵
- The US mediated behind closed doors the Washington Agreement in March 1994 between the Bosnian Muslims and Croats that ended the violence and created the Federation between Croats and Muslims.¹²⁶
- The Contact Group mediated the Erdut Agreement on Eastern Slavonia concluded in November 1995.¹²⁷
- Mediation by shuttle diplomacy conducted by the US negotiation team in the ¹²² On the Brioni negotiations, see Kalman 1993:56pp, Jansa 1994:246pp, Genscher 1995:940, Holbrooke 1998:29, Large n.d.:6, Lucarelli 2000:20 pp, Markovic 2000:20pp.

¹²³ Thereby including the JNA as a negotiating partner – something the EC had failed to do (Woodward 1995:183).

¹²⁴ On these negotiations, see Genscher 1995:964, Meder and Reimann 1996:5, Gow 1997:60, Libal 1997:76, Vance 2001, Goulding 2002:294pp, Kaufman 2002:xiv.

¹²⁵ Prevlaka is a peninsula belonging to Croatia but at the border to Montenegro. In September 1992, ECMM and ICFY jointly negotiated the withdrawal of the JNA from the area and its subsequent demilitarisation. UNPROFOR (UNSCR 779) supervised the withdrawal with military observers. After 1995, a UN observer mission (UNMOP) took over monitoring the area until its mandate was ended end of 2002. See Gow 1997:106, Maloney 1997:41pp, Zitzlaff 1999:47, Lucarelli 2000:39, Markovic 2000:70.

¹²⁶ There are little details known about how this agreement came about. See the comments in 4.1.3.3 and see Radio Zid 1994, Owen 1995:268pp, Burg and Shoup 1999:294, Lucarelli 2000:59, Markovic 2000:134pp, Schwegmann 2003:81.

¹²⁷ See the section on UNTAES below in 4.3.2, and Holbrooke 1998:266pp, Markovic 2000:244, Schoups 2001:389.

conflict between Macedonia and Greece eventually ended with an interim agreement between the two countries signed on 13th September 1995 (see Ackermann 2000:122pp).

- The Dayton Agreement of December 1995 ended the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina. It was prepared by shuttle mediation undertaken by the US negotiation team led by Holbrooke.¹²⁸
- During March-May 2001, NATO, the OSCE and the USA negotiated the end of the armed Albanian uprising in the Presevo valley in South Serbia (International Crisis Group 2003d).
- In August 2001, the EU, NATO and the OSCE mediated the Ohrid Agreement ending the violence in Macedonia (Broughton 2002:270, Paes and Schlotter 2002, International Crisis Group 2003h).
- In early 2003, the EU mediated an agreement between Serbia and Montenegro to found a confederation (Klotz 2002:245).

On the other side there have been whole years spent with unsuccessful negotiations:

- OSCE remained relatively ineffective, despite the launch of its Early Crisis Mechanism (Becker 1991:944, Libal 1997:14, Lucarelli 2000:19, Kaufman 2002:21).
- EC / EU, UN and Contact Group all failed to secure the agreement of all sides to the different peace plans proposed for Bosnia-Herzegovina between 1992 and 1994.
- NATO and the OSCE's efforts to stop the escalation of violence in Kosovo in ¹²⁸ To call the Dayton conference a face-to-face meeting may be misleading. Mostly the parties stayed in different rooms, and the negotiators went from one to the other. Holbrooke uses the term 'proximity talks'.

There is no full agreement in the literature on why Dayton was successful. It was probably a mix of different factors, among them

- the international community speaking finally with one voice,
- the escalation of the enforcement means,
- Croatia and Serbia being in basic agreement (to partition Bosnia-Herzegovina),
- the military aid the US promised the Bosnian government, called the Train and Equip programme. It was agreed in the context of the Washington Agreement in 1994. See Cousens and Cater 2001:40, Duffield 2001:67, Riegler 1999:48pp, Shearer 1998:57.
- a military balance achieved in summer / autumn 1995.

On the negotiations in Dayton, see Holbrooke 1998, Ischinger 1998, Sloan 1998:75, Burg and Shoup 1999:413, Clark 2001:54pp, 65, Kaufman 2002:120, Schneckener 2003:45.

1998 achieved only short-term relief, undone by the failure of the February 1999 Rambouillet conference.¹²⁹ The negotiators probably were guided by the false assumption that Milosevic would cave in when faced with the threat of military intervention as he had before Dayton (see Clark 2001:185, Dannreuther 2001:23, Kaufman 2002:177pp).

4.2 The Use of Peace-keeping Instruments

Peace-keeping has been defined here as the prevention of direct violence through influence or control of the behaviour of potential perpetrators.

In the area of former Yugoslavia during the time under consideration there were a large number of peace-keeping missions with different mandates, scope and character.

4.2.1 Military Peace-keeping Missions

The first military peace-keeping mission was the United Nation Protection Force (UNPROFOR). UNPROFOR was set up in January 1992 (by UNSCR 727 and 743) to monitor the borders between the government-controlled and Serb-held territories within Croatia. For that purpose, four 'UN Protected Areas-UNPA' were created along the zones. In December 1992 UNPROFOR was split into three units: UNPROFOR I in Croatia, being renamed UNCRO in 1995 before being withdrawn in January 1996, II in Bosnia-Herzegovina until end of 1995 and III from January 1993 in Macedonia, renamed the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force Macedonia (UNPREDEP) in 1995 and withdrawn in 1999. UNPROFOR's mandate was changed and enlarged several times between 1992 and 1995.¹³⁰ In Gow's words, ¹²⁹ As in the case of Dayton, some shuttle mediation prepared the conference itself, but it was orchestrated from the beginning with the threat by NATO to bomb Yugoslavia if the Serbian troops did not stop their fighting. The Contact Group had defined a list of 'non-negotiable principles' for Rambouillet. Two of them were irreconcilable: the territorial integrity of FR Yugoslavia and mechanisms for a final political settlement for Kosovo. See Zitzlaff 1999:42, Zumach 1999:66, Clark 2000:250, Buendnis 90-Die Gruenen Bundestagsfraktion 2001:18pp, Dannreuther 2001:19pp, Judah 2002:144, 201,220; Kaufman 2002:172pp, Dauphinee 2003, Wolff 2003:91pp.

¹³⁰ The deployment grew from 11,000 troops in Croatia to (figures from March 1995) 38,599 military personnel, including 684 United Nations military observers. The Force also included 803 civilian police, 2,017 other international civilian staff and 2,615 local staff. The expenses for UNPROFOR

UNPROFOR's "de facto mandate was to create and maintain a stalemate on the ground to allow international diplomacy to work" (Gow 1997:102). Over time it took on a number of roles (see Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:276pp):

- Peace-keeping functions in and at the border of four UN-Protected Areas in Croatia;
- Performance of immigration and customs functions on Croatia's borders;
- Monitoring of cease-fires in Bosnia-Herzegovina,
- Providing security and functioning of the Sarajevo airport; including the delivery of humanitarian aid through the airport;
- Delivery of humanitarian assistance to Bosnia-Herzegovina, protection of UNHCR aid convoys;¹³¹
- Monitoring of military withdrawals, heavy equipment removal, and demilitarisation of the Prevlaka peninsula;
- Passive monitoring of a flight ban over Bosnia-Herzegovina (its active enforcement was later given as a mandate to NATO),
- Deterring attacks against the so-called 'safe areas' in Bosnia (Srebrenica, Sarajevo, Zepa, Gorazde, Tuzla and Bihac) that were created by the UN to protect these ethnic enclaves.

UNPROFOR is generally not considered to have been a successful peace-keeping mission. Croatia criticised its failure to implement the demilitarisation of the Serbian territories and their return to Croatia. In 1995, others noted that UNPROFOR could merely watch while Croatia reoccupied by force most of the Serb-held territories (Fetherston 1994:77, Gow 1997:104pp). In Bosnia-Herzegovina it undoubtedly contributed enormously to the humanitarian relief efforts (see Owen 1995:349 and 366). In many cases its presence contributed to the security in the area, and it separated the Croatian and Muslim troops after the Washington Agreement in 1994.

were about US$4,7 billion which made it the most expensive peace-keeping mission by the UN to that date (Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:285).

For references on UNPROFOR, see Morillon 1993, MacKenzie 1993, Fetherston 1994:75pp, Woodward 1995:105pp, Ekwall-Uebelhart and Raevsky 1996:25pp, Gow 1997:105pp and 131, Hillen 1998:142pp, Burg and Shoup 1999:91, de Jonge Oudraat 1999, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999: 276pp, Weiss 1999:97pp, Gordon 2001, Goulding 2002:322pp, Hedl and Magas 2002.

¹³¹ In 1993 alone, almost 5,000 UNHCR convoys were escorted (Hillen 2000:172).

On the other hand, the humanitarian convoys were also regularly used by Bosnians as a cover for attacks on the Serbian troops (see Ripley 1999:121). UNPROFOR often appeared helpless in the face of the ongoing violence and, because of the vulnerability of its own troops, was viewed by many politicians as more of a liability than an asset. It proved unable to give protection to two of the so-called safe areas (Zepa and Srebrenica) when the Serbian troops decided to occupy them in 1995 (see Leuridijk 1996:60p, Gow 1997:127, Sloan 1998:28, Ripley 1999:114).¹³² Two of its main problems were the lack of resources and an unrealistic mandate (Weiss 1999:97). Hillen (2000:195) identifies three reasons for the failure of UNPROFOR: the lack of co-operation from the warring parties, inadequate numbers to form a deterrent presence in a very difficult terrain, and the incapacity to use active force.¹³³

The military peace-keeping mission of the UN in Macedonia, although a part of UNPROFOR, had a very particular threefold mandate: 1) To monitor parts of border areas with Albania and FR Yugoslavia, 2) To strengthen Macedonia's stability by providing preventive forces, and 3) To report on developments that would constitute a threat to the country, meaning an attack by FR Yugoslavia on Macedonia. Initially reducing tensions between Albanians and Macedonians was a secondary concern, mainly left to the OSCE, but it later came to receive more attention. UNPREDEP came to a premature end when China vetoed its continuation in February 1999 (in retaliation for Macedonia recognising Taiwan in the hopes of obtaining a loan - Ackermann 2003:118). The Macedonia mission has been evaluated very positively, almost all analysts acknowledging its role in enhancing the sense of security within the country and strengthening the moderate political orientation of the Gligorov administration (see Moeller 1997:293pp, Ackermann 2000:121, Lund 2000c:199). Subsequently in 2001 NATO carried out a short-term disarmament mission in Macedonia, 'Operation Essential Harvest', after the Ohrid Peace Agreement brought an end to the flare-up of violence between Albanian rebels and the Macedonian government. It collected about 3,000 weapons and was declared successful by ¹³² The behaviour of the troops on the ground varied considerably. In , several cases UN forces went beyond pure self-defence, as for example when British troops held Serbian troops in May 1995 at Gorazde until Muslim troops were able to take over.

¹³³ Weiss (1999:131pp) developed an assessment of military costs and civilian benefits from UNPROFOR's intervention that lists costs, casualties and political impact as well as civilian benefits in different areas.

NATO, although observers noted that little real disarmament had taken place, with only old weapons having been handed in (see Petruseva 2001, Vankovska 2002).¹³⁴

In Bosnia-Herzegovina, the Dayton Accords charged NATO with the deployment of a 'robust' military peace-keeping force with 58,000 troops to ensure the exact delineation of the agreed cease-fire and inter-entity boundaries, the separation of forces, and demilitarisation.¹³⁵ After a year, the 'Implementation Force' IFOR was renamed Stabilization Force (SFOR) whose mandate included also securing free movement in Bosnia-Herzegovina, humanitarian work and support to civilian organisations, securing elections, protection of minority return and other tasks (see Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:17pp).¹³⁶

The overall purpose of post-war peace-keeping in Bosnia has been to create a secure environment in which reconstruction and peace-building could take place. Generally it has been considered highly successful (unlike its predecessor UNPROFOR) thanks to the 'robustness' of its Chapter VII mandate, its more limited focus, and the greater degree of acceptance and legitimacy it enjoys since it came after the cease-fire (see the literature cited above).

The 'Kosovo Force' KFOR was mandated by UN Security Council Resolution 1244 after the end of the NATO war. It is based on and led by NATO, but also includes troops from non-NATO-states including Russia. Initially it comprised 46,000 to 50,000 soldiers (42,500 in Kosovo and the rest in Macedonia) and its overall mandate was formulated along similar lines to that of SFOR: To establish and maintain a secure environment in Kosovo, including public safety and order; to monitor, verify and when necessary, enforce compliance with the agreements that ended the conflict; and to provide assistance to the UN Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) (KFOR Information n.d.).

¹³⁴ The almost daily articles published in die tageszeitung between 8 August and 27 September) were also a source.

¹³⁵ By UNSCR 1031. The numbers were gradually reduced. In 2003, 12,000 troops remained. IFOR's very limited mandate was criticised and led to the eventual change of the mandate one year later. So for example IFOR refused to accompany and protect minority returns (see Riegler 1999:51).

¹³⁶ In 2004, the European Union took over the peace-keeping from NATO, and SFOR became EUFOR with a current strength (in 2008) of 6,500 troops (see the webpage of EUFOR, <www.euforBosnia-Herzegovina.org>).

On IFOR/ SFOR, see also the literature below on the UN protectorate in Bosnia, and Meder and Reimann 1996, Oschlies 1997, Pugh 1998, Sloan 1998, Kaufman 2002.

Another of its functions has been to deter a new attack by FR Yugoslavia. Besides the pure peace-keeping tasks like separation of the armed forces, prevention of violence, de-mining, disarmament etc., KFOR also involved itself in a wide variety of peace-building activities including reconstruction, food distribution and provision of medical services.¹³⁷

KFOR has been criticised for its inadequate protection of the Serbian minority on occasions, and its failure to function effectively during the days of ‘ethnic’ clashes in 2004 (Judah 2002:288, O’Neill 2002:44, 107, Skoglund 2004.).¹³⁸

On three occasions in former-Yugoslavia, troops capable of military enforcement have been deployed to protect (military or civilian) peace-keepers, although none of them saw major action:

- Sanctioned by UN Security Council Resolution 998, France and Britain sent about 10,000 troops as a Rapid Deployment Force to Bosnia-Herzegovina in June- July 1995 (see Ripley 1999:130pp).¹³⁹ They were meant to protect an eventual withdrawal of UNPROFOR that was foreseen at that stage as necessary to give NATO free hand with militarily enforcing an end of the war.
- The second was the NATO Extraction Force, deployed in Macedonia in December 1998 to protect the staff of the Kosovo Verification Mission (Troebst 1999, Weller 1999:22, Zitzlaff 1999:42, Loquai 2000:10, Judah 2002:188).
- The third was ‘Operation Amber Fox’ in Macedonia, set up by NATO in 2001-2002 with around 700 troops in the follow-up to Operation Essential Harvest. Its mandate was to protect the civilian EU and OSCE monitors overseeing the implementation of the peace plan. (see International Crisis Group 2002c, Saskova 2003)¹⁴⁰

One further type of military peace-keeping needs to be mentioned here, observer missions such as those deployed in the Prevlaka peninsula 1992-2002. Mostly these observer missions were part of the respective overall peace-keeping mission in the ¹³⁷ On these activities, see Clark 2001:410p, Reinhard 2001, Kaufman 2002:200, Judah 2002:284p, O’Neil 2002:43pp, KFOR Information n.d. and KFOR Objectives/Mission n.d.

¹³⁸ Reinhardt (2002), the second KFOR commander, considers KFOR a success and claims that it fulfilled its mandate.

¹³⁹ See also Krech 1997:132, Lucarelli 2000:68, Markovic 2000:206p, Kaufman 2002:118.

¹⁴⁰ In 2003, the EU took over responsibility for the deployment, and Amber Fox became Concordia. It was in 2004 replaced by a Police Operation (‘Proxima’) region. They served as ‘eyes and ears’ of the UN, sought to deter atrocities, acted as mediators between warring parties (for example in Mostar in summer 1993 and in Bosnia-Herzegovina in the winter of 1993-1994) and as confidence builders for the local population (Husum 1998).

4.2.2 Civilian Peace-keeping

There have been two larger-scale civilian peace-keeping missions. They are of special interest from the point of view of nonviolent intervention because they are early examples of civilian peace-keeping organised by intergovernmental organisations.¹⁴¹

The first was the European Community Monitoring Mission (ECMM, later EUMM, from 1991-2007).¹⁴² In July 1991 the ECMM was sent to Slovenia and Croatia with a typical peace-keeping mandate, namely to help establish the ceasefire by

- Lifting the blockade of JNA units and facilities,
- Facilitating the unconditional return of JNA units to their barracks,
- Clearing roads,
- Effecting the return of all facilities and equipment to JNA,
- Monitoring the deactivation of territorial defence units and their return to quarters,
- Monitoring the suspension of the implementation of declarations of independence for the agreed period of three months in 1991,
- If and when required, monitoring the release and return of prisoners detained in connection with hostilities since 25 June 1991 in cooperation with ICRC

¹⁴¹ Though their civilian character however was limited since they operated in heavily militarised scenarios. The Kosovo Verification Mission was even protected by a NATO Extraction Force (see above).

¹⁴² They were mainly recruited from civil servants (diplomats) and the military (professional soldiers). Besides the (then 12) EC countries also Canada, Sweden and some Eastern European countries participated. The head of the mission automatically came from the country which had the EC (EU) presidency, and changed every six months (as did most of the monitors, few of whom had contracts for longer than six months.) The EUMM in the Western Balkans came to an end formally on 31 December 2007, during its final years only maintaining a presence in Montenegro and Albania. For ECMM / EUMM in general, see Mercier 1995:29, Zimmermann 1996:172, Giersch 1998:96pp and 129pp, Ripley 1999:57, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:88, Weller 1999:220, ICVA 2000, Goulding 2002:303.

(Maloney 1997:28pp).

With the deployment of UNPROFOR in 1992, the mandate of ECMM changed. It concentrated then on those thematic and geographic areas which did not fall under the UNPROFOR mandate, gathering information on ceasefire violations, military movements, the local civil situation and the status of implementation of the Vance Peace Plan of 1991 (the plan that had led to the deployment of UNPROFOR I). They also accompanied international negotiator teams, brokered local cease-fires, helped with the exchange of prisoners of war, escorted (without arms) humanitarian aid, reported on human rights violations, etc.¹⁴³

At the end of 1992 EC monitors were also sent (on request by these states) to Albania, Hungary, Bulgaria and Macedonia. The intention of these deployments was to prevent 'spill-over', and to monitor the security situation (Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:88pp). After 1996 they started working in Kosovo, and in November 1999 deployed observers to FR Yugoslavia to monitor the political and security developments, and facilitate contacts between the parties (Mauro 2002:303). In March 2001, EUMM also became active in the North West of Macedonia (European Union Monitoring Mission n.d.).¹⁴⁴

In Croatia the ECMM ran into many problems. It faced logistical dilemmas and suffered from poor communication and confusion over objectives and priorities. The Serbs saw the monitors as spies for Croatia, while in Croatia they were considered highly ineffective and usually referred to by the nick-name 'ice-cream men' because of their white uniforms (see Maloney 1997, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:88pp, Weller 1999:220, Lucarelli 2000:26pp). Nevertheless, they may have achieved more on the ground than they were credited with at the time, preventing small incidents from leading to major confrontations (see Gow 1997:106, Libal 1997:49, Girsch 1998:98).

Under the threat of NATO intervention in Kosovo in the autumn of 1998, the Yugoslav government under Milosevic agreed at the end of October 1998 to the deployment of a 'Kosovo Verification Mission' (KVM) under the umbrella of OSCE

¹⁴³ They also became involved in small-scale humanitarian aid, for example delivering letters across border-lines, locating missing people etc. (EUMM 2004)

¹⁴⁴ At that time, it consisted of approximately 100 monitors seconded by EU member states as well as by Norway and Slovakia.

(Loquai 2000:31 pp).¹⁴⁵ An unarmed OSCE mission was acceptable to both sides, although the Kosovo-Albanian leadership would have preferred an armed peace-keeping force. Deployment began in November 1998, but not having the personnel (or equipment) ready, the Mission only reached around 75% of the agreed number of 2,000 staff before it was withdrawn on March 20, 1999 after the collapse of the Rambouillet negotiations.

Its mandate was to establish a permanent presence throughout Kosovo, monitor the ceasefire agreed between OSCE and FR Yugoslavia in October 1998 and to report cease-fire violations, conduct border monitoring, facilitate the return of refugees along with ICRC and UNHCR, and it was also anticipated that they would supervise elections in Kosovo. The Verifiers established permanent outposts in crisis areas, visited places where fighting was reported, monitored several court trials, conducted weapons verification inspections, accompanied Serbian police and Serbian investigators to places controlled by the UCK, and sought to intervene actively if they came across violent incidents (Loquai 2000:42, 60; the Kosovo Updates from 1999, OSCE 1999e, OSCE 1999f, Walker 1999).

The evaluation of KVM is rather contested. On the one hand, it undoubtedly managed to reduce violence by talking to both sides and convincing them to contain localised outbreaks of violence.¹⁴⁶ In addition, their mere presence played a role in restraining violence (Walker 1999, Loquai 2000:62). Specifically, at the beginning of the mission the cease-fire was respected. Both the Serbs and the more moderate commanders of the UCK were willing to stop fighting, which gave a chance for stabilisation of the situation. Refugees and displaced persons returned in greater numbers as the fighting calmed down (Loquai 2000:61, Wenig 1999/2000:89). According to Wenig (1999 and 2000:84) even in January-February 1999 when the situation became tense again, the arrival of KVM personnel on the scene usually had a de-escalating effect.

On the other hand the Verifiers could not contain the violence. There were attacks on police and civilians all the time in varying degrees, and increasingly also on the ¹⁴⁵ The main literature on the KVM are: OSCE 1999a, OSCE 1999b, Weller 1999:22, Daalder and O'Hanlon 2000:47, Loquai 2000, Clark 2001:139pp, CORE 2002, Judah 2002, Kaufman 2002: xxi, 163 and 189, Schweitzer et al. 2001, Dufour 2007.

¹⁴⁶ "The first weeks of deployment had shown that in those areas where verifiers were present, the number of incidents decreased." (Wenig 1999:83p, translation CS)

Verifiers themselves (see OSCE 1999g, and the Kosovo Updates from 27.1.99, 22.2.99, 23.2.99, 26.2.99). The agreement to deploy KVM was also flawed because it was an agreement between the USA and FR Yugoslavia, with the UCK not being a party to it, and not feeling bound by it (Calic 1998b, Loquai 2000:24 and 54, Riedel and Kalman 2000:157, Schweitzer 1999c). As Judah (2002:198) and Loquai (2000:62) point out, the cease-fire was also used by the UCK to move back into its strongholds as soon as the Yugoslavs withdrew, probably in preparation for a new offensive in spring 1999.¹⁴⁷

My evaluation would be that under the circumstances KVM was deployed - with one party of the conflict explicitly hoping to bring about the military intervention already threatened against the other party - the KVM was surprisingly successful in the field.¹⁴⁸

¹⁴⁷ Some opponents of NATO intervention have voiced the suspicion that the KVM was no more than a smoke screen to prepare the NATO campaign and spy out military targets for NATO (see Scheffran 1999:63, Loquai 2000:36p). The facts in the sources and secondary literature, however, all tend to indicate that NATO was already prepared and willing to attack, not wishing a second protracted war like in Bosnia, but that it did not have a primary overriding interest in starting this war as soon as a pretext offered itself.

¹⁴⁸ There were several other missions and organisations with peace-keeping roles and functions:

- The Kosovo Diplomatic Observer Mission (KDOM), consisting of diplomats of the USA, Russia and the EU accredited to Belgrade, was created in July 1998 before the deployment of the KVM, and continued on in close cooperation with the OSCE until the two missions eventually were merged. Its tasks were reporting, escorting staff, investigating incidents, patrolling, and meeting village leaders to discuss security. See Petritsch et al. 1999:225, Troebst 1999, Zitzlaff 1999:42, Kaufman 2002:162, as well as the KDOM Daily Reports and KDOM Updates.
- International police (IPTF/ CIVPOL and EUPM) were deployed by the UN or the EU at one point or the other in almost all countries of former Yugoslavia. They have usually had a mandate that focussed on training of local police (which would fall under peace-building), but many of them also had a monitoring element to their mandate including dealing with incidents of political violence and how ethnic minorities were treated by the local police forces. The IPT in Kosovo from 1999 onward has been one of the first international police missions with an executive mandate, meaning that they have the right to arrest people themselves rather than only accompanying local forces. For the International Police missions, see Eide and Holm 2000, Hartz 2000, Gourlay 2004, Orsini 2004.
- UNHCR being UN's lead agency to deal with the humanitarian crises in former Yugoslavia also had a clearly protection-related mandate, e.g. through its presence at vulnerable places. There were also cases when UNHCR helped threatened groups to leave the area or the country, although this was mostly the initiative of the staff on the ground and not part of their mandate. To avoid the accusation of helping with ethnic cleansing, UNHCR was not supposed to help people escape (see Woodward 1995:319 and 325, Otim 1996:121). For UNHCR in general, see the webpage <http://www.unhcr.ba/>, and also Mercier 1995:40 and 49, Woodward 1995:243, Gow 1997, Weiss 1999:108 and 117; Ackermann 2000:174, UNHCR 2000a, International Crisis Group 2002-b, UNHCR 2003.

4.2.3 Peace-keeping: Another Picture of Mixed Results

Peace-keeping interventions took place during each phase of the conflict's escalation. There were not only missions after cease-fire agreements were concluded (SFOR, KFOR, KVM), but also during war (UNPROFOR in Bosnia-Herzegovina, ECMM), and in one case as a preventive deployment (UNPROFOR/UNPREDEP in Macedonia).

As discussed above, the evaluation of each of the different military peace-keeping missions has been contested, with UNPROFOR II in Bosnia being probably on the negative end of the spectrum, and SFOR and UNPROFOR III / UNPREDEP rated most positively. The experience of these missions has also informed deliberations within the UN. The most important general conclusion drawn was that no future peace-keeping missions should be mobilised without a cease-fire first being established. They should also have clear and realistic mandates, and missions should be deployed under Chapter VII of the UN Charter in order to ensure enforcement capacity. Another consequence has also been that the deployment of large-scale missions (Bosnia-Herzegovina after 1995, Kosovo 1999) became a role for NATO (see Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999, Hillen 2000:246pp, van Brabant 2001).

As to the civilian missions, once again there has been no consensus regarding their achievements. One side has drawn from the experiences in former Yugoslavia the conclusion that peace-keeping needs the capacity of armed enforcement, and that unarmed observers have no place in war. In this view, they can even tempt perpetrators to attack because they cannot defend themselves (see Seidt 2002:47). The other side believes that in spite of difficult circumstances the civilian missions in the former Yugoslavia are examples that unarmed peace-keeping may work, and that civilian large-scale peace-keeping is an instrument with significant potential (see Schweitzer et al. 2001).

4.3 The Use of Peace-building Instruments

Peace-building has been defined as all those activities that address structural issues and relationships between the conflict parties in an effort to reverse the destructive processes of conflict and war.

As a strategy it covers a much broader range of activities than the other two, peace-keeping and peace-making. The enormous amount and diversity of activities makes it very difficult to come to a good summary overview of such initiatives in relation to the Yugoslav conflicts.

The understanding of most of the external actors engaged in peace-building is that its overall objective is to help create a sustainable situation, marked by the absence of violent conflict and by rule of law, a state taking adequate care of the needs of its citizens, a democratic system with parties and elections, a vibrant civil society, free media and a working economy capable of providing sustained income to the population (see Licklider 2001:749pp, CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects 2006:10pp).¹⁴⁹

4.3.1 Peace-building Activities by State Actors

Peace-building has been the strategy where civil society actors were as involved as state actors. Also, unlike in peace-making and peace-keeping where international organisations and state governments dominated the field, sub-state entities like regions, states ('bundeslaender'), municipalities etc. have been involved in various peace-building activities (see Coletti et al. 2007).¹⁵⁰

4.3.1.1 Humanitarian Relief

In humanitarian relief, UNHCR played the lead role during the periods of war in the coordination of material aid and support for IDPs and refugees (Cutts 1999, Ruessmann 1999c).

¹⁴⁹ None of these objectives is value-free. The international community intervening in the former Yugoslavia (and in most other conflicts in other parts of the world) sees itself as part of the Western culture, and is seeking to implement its understanding and visions on how state and society have to look like and to interact.

¹⁵⁰ See Coletti et al. 2007 for a discussion of the role of sub-state authorities in the conflicts of the Balkans.

A well-known example is the initiative Causes Communes which was founded in 1993 by Swiss and Belgium communities. Causes Communes in which more than half of all Belgium communities participated, formed partnerships on the community level with refugee camps in former Yugoslavia, mostly collecting humanitarian aid for them (see Busch 1992, Large n.d.:19).

Individual governments provided large sums of money and sent their aid organisations. There are no total figures, but perhaps the following give an impression of the size of aid that went to the area.

- UNHCR sent 950,000 metric tonnes of humanitarian assistance to some 2,7 million beneficiaries in Bosnia between 1992 and 1995 (Cutts 1999:2).
- According to one statistic, Bosnia-Herzegovina alone in 1995 received US$ 391 million emergency aid which put it on the top of the list of aid recipients that year (Fearon 2006).
- Between July 1992 and end of 1995, UNHCR also co-ordinated an airlift to Sarajevo that delivered an estimated 160,000 tonnes of food, medicines and other goods to Sarajevo in over 12,000 flights (Cutts 1999:18) In 1994 alone, 55,000 tonnes came by airlift, and around 27,000 by truck (Weiss 1999:109).

4.3.1.2 Disarmament, Demobilisation and Reintegration of Soldiers ('DDR')

Where peace-keeping forces were deployed, DDR came under their mandate.¹⁵¹ In Bosnia-Herzegovina, the demobilisation was supervised by IFOR / SFOR, and financed by the World Bank. Of the estimated 400,000 soldiers in 1995, around 370,000 were demobilised by 2000 (King, Dorn and Hodes 2002:10pp).¹⁵² In Kosovo, the UCK was officially disbanded, the weapons collected and stored in sites watched by KFOR, and the fighters either were supported in going back to civil life, or became part of the Kosovo Protection Corps that was intended to be an unarmed civil relief organisation helping with reconstruction.¹⁵³ Some also were accepted into the newly formed police service (KFOR n.d.-a and b, O'Neill 2002:43pp, Reinhardt 2002:40 and 571). In Macedonia in 2001, NATO as mentioned in 4.2.1 collected weapons from the Albanian rebels after the Ohrid peace agreement.

¹⁵¹ On DDR activities, see Krech 1997:156pp, Sloan 1998:88, Zitzlaff 1999:55, International Crisis Group 2001a, Kaufman 2002:144, Meyer zum Felde 2002:74, de Vrieze 2002:293.

¹⁵² At the same time, the USA ran the 'Train and Equip' programme mentioned above, using a private mercenary firm (MPRI) to train Bosnian government soldiers (the RS was at first not included in the programme). See Krech 1997:138, King, Dorn and Hodes 2002.

¹⁵³ IOM for example set up Employment Assistance centres and ran training programmes (Core 2002:51, Clark 2002, 19).

4.3.1.3 Physical Reconstruction and Refugee Return

Physical reconstruction has mostly been financed with international government money, and governmental as well as non-governmental agencies took care of much of the implementation (see chapter 7).¹⁵⁴

Reconstruction has been closely linked to refugee return: Soon after the Dayton Agreement the countries hosting refugees wished them to return which gave in consequence a boost to reconstruction efforts.¹⁵⁵ On the ground, refugee return was the primary responsibility of UNHCR (see UNHCR 1999a, 2003a and 2004). It has been one of main challenges in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Initially UNHCR and other implementers emphasised repatriation to areas where displaced could be assured of their security which basically meant those areas where their own ethnic group was the majority. So-called minority return gathered pace only several years after the end of the war.¹⁵⁶

Another state actor involved in reconstruction (and in humanitarian aid) has been the military. Sometimes these were private initiatives of the soldiers involved.¹⁵⁷

Frequently, however, international forces used humanitarian aid and reconstruction aid as a means to gain acceptance in the population - aid became here an element of force protection (Lambach 2004:9): It was part of IFOR's mandate to rebuild schools

¹⁵⁴ To give a figure of the challenge the task of reconstruction posed: In Bosnia nearly 500,000 dwellings were damaged or destroyed of which by 2000-2001, 125,000 dwellings had been rehabilitated (Wilkinson 2001). In Kosovo, some 120,000 homes were damaged during the war, with 49,000 beyond repair (United States Committee for Refugees 2001).

¹⁵⁵ Host countries of the Bosnian refugees adopted various policies. Austria after first seeking to restrict the immigration in 1992, offered all Bosnians work permits from 1993 on, an offer that 60,000 Bosnians accepted. Sweden offered the same for its 58,000 war refugees (though deporting Albanians from Kosovo, as did many other European countries as well before 1998), and so did Denmark, Norway and Turkey. Switzerland and Germany (who had hosted between 320,000 and 400,000 war refugees) sought quick repatriation and enforced it for those who did not accept to leave voluntarily, against the concerns raised by UNHCR. All countries provided some sort of financial aid for the returnees, and also facilitated test visits to prepare the return (see Woodward 1995:364, Krech 1007:172, Oschlies 1997:93pp and 118pp).

¹⁵⁶ In the first two years, returns to the Republika Srpska (RS) were minimal. After 1997, minority returns stepped up. UNHCR announced in 2004 that in total 1.000.473 people had returned to their home areas. (All figures from Kleck 2007-a:107p and 'Over A Million Bosnians Back Home' 2004).

¹⁵⁷ For example Italian soldiers in Bosnia-Herzegovina made collections at home of food, toys and clothes for distribution in refugee camps. A Norwegian Battalion in their free time repaired and cleaned schools and football fields in their free time. Turkish soldiers collected money among themselves and spend it on assistance (e.g. buying watches for blind children). A Canadian Army surgeon worked once a week in hospital in Kosovo to do operations, and German soldiers formed a organisation called 'Lachen helfen' – 'Help to laugh' (Hilaj 1998, Blix 1999, Paulsen 1999, Andersen 2000, Lambach 2004:7).

and hospitals, and restore key telecommunication assets. Their Civil-Military-Cooperation (CIMIC) team had 350 specialists (lawyers, educators, public transportation specialists, engineers, agricultural experts, economists, public health officials, veterinarians, communication experts) who gave technical advice and assistance to various commissions and working groups, civilian organisations, NGOs and local authorities (Joulwan and Shoemaker 1998, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:17pp, Riegler 1999:20pp and 50pp, Lambach 2004).

The same is true for KFOR which engaged public works and utilities, construction, transportation, railway operations, fire services, food distribution, removal of unexploded ordnance, mine-awareness education, medical services, etc. (KFOR Objectives/Mission n.d.-b).¹⁵⁸

4.3.1.4 Social and Psycho-social Work

In this field, the international state actors mainly played the role of donors financing NGOs doing the work, or working through their specialised development organisations. This kind of work will be described more in chapter 7 below.

4.3.1.5 Economic Recovery

While both state and non-state actors worked and continue to work in this field, the big financial aid and reconstruction programmes usually came from states and international organisations like EU, USA, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF).¹⁵⁹

According to Woodward (2002:185) economic aid is serving three basic purposes:

1. Reviving the economy to buy confidence in the peace process;
2. Funding to implement specific commitments laid down in the peace agreement;
3. Laying economic foundations necessary to sustain peace over the longer term.

¹⁵⁸ For example, Jordan and the United Arab Emirates that participated with a small troop in KFOR built a hospital in Vucitrn that served the local population (Reinhardt 2002:467).

¹⁵⁹ Financial aid by the EU between 1991-1999: Bosnia-Herzegovina: 2,061.87 m €, Croatia 353.76 m €, FR Yugoslavia: 471.80 m €, Macedonia 403.89 m €, Regional Cooperation 462.15 m €. Member states of the EU gave to Bosnia-Herzegovina: 507,90 m €, Croatia 1,165.9 0m €, FR Yugoslavia: 712.40 m €, Macedonia 178.20 m €, which sums up to 16,956 million € by the European Union to former Yugoslavia (Polzer 2000:143pp).

For Bosnia-Herzegovina after 1995 several donor conferences were held which decided on substantial multilateral and bilateral aid (see Schneckener 2003:57pp).¹⁶⁰ The Office of the High Commissioner (OHR) was also involved with privatisation of enterprises, and with making economic contracts.

In Kosovo, UNMIK (see below) took over the administration of the entire public sector, handling the management of 370 socially owned enterprises, and sold some of them, for example the Trepca Mines, to international firms (Pugh 2000:10, Del Re 2003:88).

After the war in Kosovo in 1999 the EU created the Stability Pact for South East Europe that targeted not only all countries in former Yugoslavia, but all South-East Europe including Bulgaria, Albania, Hungary etc.¹⁶¹ It is based on the assumption that only economic recovery and democratisation would bring sustainable peace to the region. In three so-called tables it deals with Democracy and Human Rights, Economic Development and Security. Its goals are trust building and to further regional solidarity and cooperation of the countries in the region, strengthen tolerance, democratisation, human rights etc, improve the security in the region, support economic recovery and market economy, and eventually bring the countries closer to Europe (see Stability Pact 2001).

Some of the donors also engaged in direct help, for example offering micro-credits like the World Bank did in Bosnia-Herzegovina (Pugh 2000:13). In Kosovo after the NATO war a number of European financial institutes and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EPRD) together founded a Micro Enterprise Bank to provide loans to small enterprises (Behrens 2002:136, CORE 2002, Reinhardt 2002:349).

¹⁶⁰ For the donor conferences, see ECU-FAX 1/96, Oschlies 1997:56, ICVA 2000, Pugh 2000:17pp, McMahon 2001, Poucher-Harbin 2002.

¹⁶¹ The Stability Pact has channelled much aid to SEE, and most countries of former Yugoslavia have initiated the process of joining the EU through the Stabilisation and Association process. However, the Stability Pact “has proved not to be, as was hoped for, a kind of Marshall Plan for the Balkans” (Detrez 2002 a:192). See also Riedel 1999:174 pp, Hombach 2000, Polzer 2000:135, Dilg 2001, Fawn 2001:151, Knaus 2001a, Papic 2001, Welfens 2001, Behrens 2002, Broughton 2002:272, Commission of the European Community 2002, CORE 2002:57, Detrez 2002a:193, Eavis and Kefford 2002:12.

4.3.1.6 Transitional Justice

The term ‘transitional justice’ emerged in the 1990s (Buckley-Zistel 2007). It is defined as a range of approaches that societies undertake to reckon with legacies of widespread or systematic human rights abuse as they move from a period of violent conflict or oppression towards peace, democracy, the rule of law, and respect for individual and collective rights. (International Center for Transitional Justice 2008a)

Several recent publications on the issue that all seek to give an overview of the different (judicial and non-judicial) approaches more or less agree (while using slightly varying terminology) on the following list of activities (Buckley-Zistel 2007, International Center for Transitional Justice 2008a, Zupan 2007): Fact-finding and documentation, lustration, truth commissions; prosecution of perpetrators of human rights abuse before both national and international courts; victims’ reparation; ‘dealing with the past’, including working with victims on traditional justice and reconciliation mechanisms; establishment of memorials and museums; and – to be discussed in this study under the sub-section ‘rebuilding public institutions’ - institutional reform and formal and non-formal education.

The OSCE and the UN have been the two international organisations most closely involved in human rights monitoring, together with a number of civil society actors. From the side of governments, especially the Special Envoy sent by the Secretary General of the United Nations and his reports played an important role, as did reports by the CSCE / OSCE (see Krech 1997:71, Lucarelli 2000:38pp).

Special mention needs to be made of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) in The Hague that was created by the United Nations (UN Security Council No 827 in May 1993) during the war in Bosnia.^{162 163} Its purposes are ¹⁶² ICTY’s full name is: “International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of the International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Former Yugoslavia since 1991”.

¹⁶³ Other activities on transitional justice have been undertaken by the national governments. In Serbia, President Kostunica established a Truth and Reconciliation Commission in February 2002. It had a three-year mandate but was disbanded in February 2003 without having undertaken any substantial research (International Center for Transitional Justice 2008c, ‘Keine Chance auf Versöhnung’ 2003, ‘Yugoslavia to set up ‘truth commission’ on war crimes’ 2001). In 2003 however, a War Crimes Chamber at the Belgrade District Court was established in 2003 and in 2004 opened the first trial concerning the killing of some 200 people seized from a hospital in to bring to justice persons allegedly responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law, to render justice to the victims, to deter further crimes, [and] to contribute to the restoration of peace by promoting reconciliation in the former Yugoslavia (United Nations 2004a).

It deals with grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, violations of the laws or customs of war, genocide and crimes against humanity if they were committed on the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991. The first trial took place in 1996. The ICTY is meant to have finished its work by 2010. In 1999, it indicted Milosevic as a war criminal. He was finally arrested in 2001 but died during trial. Several other serious perpetrators are still free.¹⁶⁴ By 2008, the ICTY had indicted a total of 161 individuals, and 48 had been sentenced (International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia 2008).¹⁶⁵

4.3.1.7 State-building, Democratisation and Civil Society Support

These tasks are today considered essential elements of peace-building. The basic objectives are to restore or establish security (mainly through a reform of the security sector), the establishment of a statehood in line with rules and procedures of modern democracy (multi-party elections, a constitution granting equal rights to all citizens etc.), and guarantee of welfare (including social services, schooling, economic reforms etc.) (see Call and Cousens 2007, Kritz 2007). It is also the probably the most political and value-loaded type of peace-building because it is shaped by particular assumptions of how the interveners think a society should function. Democracy aid, while being an element of international politics since the 1960s, became especially fashionable after 1989 in the context of the revolutions in Eastern Europe and former Soviet Union.

Vukovar (Croatia) in 1991. In Bosnia-Herzegovina, there have been two short-termed truth commissions mostly doing fact finding on Srebrenica and the siege of Sarajevo, and the establishment of a War Crimes Chamber created with the direct involvement of the ICTY (International Center for Transitional Justice 2008c, Orentlicher 2008:62pp).

For lustration, there has been no legislation other than in Serbia in 2003, but there was no real access for victims to secret files. In Croatia and Macedonia, personal files kept by state security are "in principle" accessible (Zupan 2007:332).

¹⁶⁴ Bosnian-Serb President Karadjic was until July 2008 on the top of that list when he was arrested in Serbia.

¹⁶⁵ On ICTY, see also Krech 1997, Zitzlaff 1999:52, Lampe 2000:380, Markovic 2000, Carothers 2001, Clark 2001:327, Vezic 2001, Freeman and Wierda 2002, Kaufman 2002: xxii, 193, O'Neill 2002:53, Tonicic 2002, Cvijanovic 2003b, and the UNSCR 808 and 827.

Carothers (1999:87pp) speaks of a 'democracy template' with three categories: elections, state institutions and civil society which, in the case of civil society interveners, is often translated into financial and other support for oppositional parties, independent media and oppositional NGOs (see also McMahon 2001). This kind of aid has provided in both Bosnia-Herzegovina and Kosovo, which were put under international administration (see below), as well as in those countries that remained independent (Macedonia, FR Yugoslavia, Croatia).¹⁶⁶ The difference is that in the quasi-protectorates the external state actors were more or less free to mould institutions and processes as they saw fit, while they had to be more circumspect in the independent countries, in order not to be accused of meddling.¹⁶⁷

Schneckener (2008) distinguishes four general strategies of state-building. Elements of at least the last three can be found in the former Yugoslavia:

1. Liberalisation first: democratisation and free markets, based on the observation that democracies tend not to go to war against each other.¹⁶⁸ Economic liberalisation and early elections have been among the first targets of the international community in Bosnia-Herzegovina.
2. Security first: Demobilisation, security sector reform, training of military and police, reform of courts, creation of peace economies, dealing with organised crime. This strategy is mostly pursued by Great Britain and partly the United Nations in their peace-keeping missions, and it can be clearly recognised as the approach taken on Kosovo.¹⁶⁹
3. Institutionalisation first: Strengthening of legitimate and effective structures on national as local level.

¹⁶⁶ For security sector reform, see King et al. 2002:8, Call and Stanley 2002. For police training and its financing, and the monitoring of courts and police, see Riegler 1999:43, Call and Barnett 2000:58pp, Cordone 2000, Holm 2000:144pp, Everts 2001, Buwitt 2002, CORE 2002:46pp, King et al. 2002:23pp, Reinhardt 2002:52 and 248; United Nations n.d.-c, Wagtman 2002, Zellner 2002:21pp. For the reform of customs service, see King et al. 2002:20pp, Petritsch 2000.

¹⁶⁷ For instance, the OSCE encountered this kind of problem in Croatia in the late 1990s (see OSCE 2004e). As a consequence interventions were couched in terms of provision of advice and support rather than the direct implementation of specific peace-building programmes. It is interesting to note that involvement in capacity building for civil society organisations and agencies only came to the forefront of the agenda of state actors at the end of the 1990s.

¹⁶⁸ See Call and Cousens 2007 for a discussion of the thesis of 'democratic peace'.

¹⁶⁹ The reform of the security sector is considered to be an important part of the rebuilding of a functioning state. It includes police, courts, prisons, rewriting of laws, capacity training and also support of the military (King, Dorn and Hodes 2002:38).

4. Civil society first: Support of parties, NGOs and independent media.¹⁷⁰

Involvement in capacity-building for civil society organisations and agencies only came to the forefront of the agenda of state actors at the end of the 1990s. This approach has found its clearest expression in the interventions on the political system in Serbia. There state and non-state actors focused on civil society, including independent media and oppositional parties, actively working towards regime change (see Pugh 2000 and chapter 7.7).¹⁷¹ For civil society support, the work of the OSCE is a good example - by the end of the 1990s it had missions in almost all countries of former Yugoslavia.¹⁷² In addition, many state actors also played the role of funders for projects that targeted civil society.

¹⁷⁰ In several cases actors from the international community even set up media of their own rather than supporting existing ones. For example they tried in Bosnia-Herzegovina to create networks of electronic media. In 1991, there were 54 radio stations and 5 TV. In 1997 these numbers had risen to 156 radio and 52 TV. At beginning of 2001, there were 210 radio and 71 TV (Udovicic 2001). Most of these networks failed. For example the Open Broadcast Network OBN that was set up after 1995 at the state level to overcome the division into the two entities cost US$20 million before it folded down (Rhodes 2007:23, Topic 2007:175). In 2004, the strategy was revised and support focused again on self-initiated radio and television stations (see Popovic 2004).

¹⁷¹ That led the EU in late 1999 even to target municipalities ruled by the opposition by making them the sole beneficiaries of a programme called 'Energy for Democracy', receiving heating oil. Only after fall of Milosevic was that programme extended to the whole of Serbia (Pugh 2000:11, Dragovic-Soso 2003:129).

¹⁷² Generally speaking the missions' purposes have been twofold: to facilitate the political processes that are intended to prevent or settle conflicts, and to ensure that the OSCE community is kept informed of developments in the countries where missions are present (OSCE 1999c:45).

In the area of former Yugoslavia, there have been several missions since 1992: The first two OSCE missions were the 'CSCE Missions of Long Duration in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina' established in summer 1992; and the OSCE 'Spillover Monitor Mission to Skopje' established in September 1992. The first one had to leave the country in July 1993 when FR Yugoslavia - reacting to the sanctions against it and its de-facto exclusion from the CSCE - refused to renew its permission to stay. Later, other missions were sent to Bosnia-Herzegovina (1996 onwards), the Republic of Croatia (since 1996), Kosovo (since 1999) and Serbia and Montenegro (since 2001). Most of them had a rather strong peace-building element together with a smaller early warning and monitoring (peace-keeping) mandate. They undertook tasks such as preparation and conduct of elections, civil society development, human and minority rights monitoring and support, rule of law development including supporting the fight of organised crime, police training, political advising, confidence building through various inter-ethnic projects, education, media development, advising and assistance to the government to increase representation of non-majority communities in public administration, support of military and public enterprises (Macedonia), monitoring and support refugee return (Croatia), institutions-building, public administration reform, anti-corruption support, election organisation and supervision. (For the different missions, see OSCE 1999c and 2004a -g.)

4.3.1.8 Peace and Dialogue

‘Peace and dialogue’ is a category that has been created to describe all those activities that took place with the explicit goal of promoting peace and reconciliation without linking this objective to activities of social work, aid or civil society support. It is often funded by state actors (governments, EU) but otherwise mostly to be found in the activities of civil society actors.

4.3.1.9 Cultural Activities

As with ‘Peace and Dialogue’ above, this category like the before mentioned category seems to have been largely limited to civil society interveners.

4.3.2 International Administration (‘Protectorates’)

The regions and countries put under international administration form a special case in the former Yugoslavia.¹⁷³ While UNTAES in Eastern Slavonia, was set up with a strict timeline as a transitional arrangement, the international missions in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Kosovo have been much longer-term and more open-ended.¹⁷⁴ Both have been the object of intensive study.¹⁷⁵

¹⁷³ The governance structures set up in Kosovo and Bosnia-Herzegovina governance structures give the international administration the power to overrule the democratically elected government of the areas. But the term ‘protectorate’ is often shunned though more and more used also in official texts, for example by the German Ministry for Development (Bundesministerium fuer wirtschaftliche Zusammenarbeit und Entwicklung 2004) that speaks of a ‘liberal protectorate’. Cousens and Cater (2001:129) talk of a ‘creeping protectorate’, Pugh (2000:2) uses the term protectorate without any qualification. One official term is ‘assisted state’.

¹⁷⁴ A fourth one was the European Union Administration in Mostar (EUAM) during the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina. It has been a special case, resulting from the otherwise failed efforts of ICFY to get the parties to agree to the Owen-Stoltenberg Plan in August 1993. That was a plan to divide Bosnia-Herzegovina into three ethnic areas, with Mostar that has always been almost half Muslim, half Croatian with a smaller Serb minority as well, being put under EU administration for two years. Only the agreement on Mostar was signed, and former Mayor of Bremen (Germany) Hans Koschnick got appointed as EU administrator. The goal of the international administration was to normalise the situation between (Muslim) East and (Croat) West Mostar and deal with the ethnic split, plan for democratic elections at the end of the mandate, and give humanitarian assistance. The administration in these two years achieved some small progress like freedom of movement between the two parts of Mostar, reconstruction, a joint police but overall met with much resistance from the side of the Croats in West Mostar. A real unification of West and East Mostar did not take place, and violence was always a possibility. Koschnick stepped down in 1996 after disagreements with the EU on how to handle the situation. After the end of the two years of EUAM, the administration of Mostar was integrated into the overall international administration of UNTAES was a complex UN mission with 5,000 soldiers and approximately 1,000 observers and civilian personnel, with a two year mandate (1996-1997) and located in the remaining Serb-held area after Croatia had reoccupied the other parts of so-called Serb Krajina in 1995. It was established by the UN Security Council (UNSCR 1037) with the Basic Agreement concluded in Erdut in November 1995 between Croatia and the Serb government in the Eastern UNPA zone. Its overall goal was to peacefully reintegrate that area into Croatia safeguarding its original multi-ethnic character. Its tasks were to supervise and facilitate demilitarisation; monitor voluntary and safe return of refugees and displaced; contribute by its presence to the maintenance of peace and security and otherwise assist in the implementation of the Erdut Agreement (see Grabner 1997, Rappold 1997, Large n.d.:110pp, Ramsbotham and Woodhouse 1999:58pp, Schoups 2001). After the end of UNTAES, the area was reintegrated into Croatia in January 2008 without the feared massive emigration by the Serbian population.

4.3.2.1 UNTAES

UNTAES is widely considered one of the most successful UN peace support missions: It found good cooperation from the conflicting parties, had a clear and time-limited mandate, sufficient resources, and support from both international governmental actors and excellent cooperation with local and international NGOs (Kruhonja 2002, Schoups 2001:391pp).

4.3.2.2 International Administration of Bosnia-Herzegovina

The international administration of Bosnia-Herzegovina was established under the Dayton Agreement. The civil administration is headed by the Office of the High Representative (OHR) who is an individual nominated by the Peace Implementation Council (PIC), a group of 55 countries and international organisations (see Troebst

Bosnia-Herzegovina. See Owen 1995:211p, Koschnick and Schneider 1996, Krech 1997:97, Lucarelli 2000:53p, Bazzocchi 2001, Bose 2002 and 109pp; Scotto 2002.

¹⁷⁵ On Bosnia-Herzegovina, see International Crisis Group 1999f and 2001c, Cousens and Cater 2001, McMahon 2001, Ducasse-Rogier 2003, Downs and Stedmann (eds.) 2002, Fischer (ed.) 2007, Gromes 2007. On Kosovo after the war, see International Crisis Group 2004a, Kellermann 2006, King and Mason 2006, Knudsen and Laustsen 2006, Kramer and Dzihic (2006), Rosenblum and Knight 2006, Smyrek 2006.

1998:39pp, Fluegger 2002:197).¹⁷⁶ In December 1997 the PIC increased the rights of the OHR, being dissatisfied with the speed of the changes implemented so far. Since then the OHR has had (and used) much more enforcement power, for example removing Bosnian public officials from office who in his eyes violated the Dayton Agreement or legal commitments, and imposing laws as he saw fit if the Bosnian legislative bodies failed to do so (see Chandler 1999, Knaus 2001b, International Crisis Group 2003g, Schneckener 2003:61).

Some important changes were enforced by the OHR against the will of many of the local politicians. The introduction of a common currency, common flag, licence plates that did not indicate the origin of the car have had an impact, bringing the two entities (Federation and Serbian Republic) closer together.

A large number of international actors have shared in the tasks of the peace implementation: NATO (military peace-keeping through IFOR/SFOR), OSCE (responsible for regional stabilisation, human rights, and elections), and the UN (United Nation Mission in Bosnia-Herzegovina - UNMIBH) are the three major ones. Besides these, also the EU, IMF, World Bank, the European Court for Human Rights, the Council of Europe, UNHCR, the European Court for Human Rights and others have been assigned tasks under the Dayton treaty (see Cousens and Cater 2001, Ducasse-Rogier 2003, Schneckener 2004).

4.3.2.3 Kosovo

The protectorate in Kosovo is based on UN Security Council Resolution 1244. Unlike in Bosnia-Herzegovina, the international organisations were put into a clear hierarchy with the UN Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) being the lead organisation (though without control over KFOR). UNHCR was made responsible for humanitarian assistance (so-called pillar one, phased out in 2000). UNMIK in addition to its coordination role has been made responsible for dealing with civil administration, justice and international police (pillar two). The OSCE (OSCE Mission in Kosovo - OMIK) became responsible for democratisation and institution-building, human rights promotion and monitoring, and for elections (pillar three).

¹⁷⁶ The PIC is seen as a successor to ICFY.

The EU was charged with the so-called pillar four: reconstruction and economic development.¹⁷⁷

As to refugee return, the situation in Kosovo was very different from Bosnia-Herzegovina. Here, the Albanian refugees returned on their own immediately after the war, and even faster than UNHCR would have liked them to do. The problem in Kosovo has been more that NATO and UNMIK failed to provide a stable security environment for the ethnic minorities - Serbs and Roma in particular. Perhaps 125,000 Serbs have left Kosovo since the war of 1999, and the events in 2004 as well as in early 2008 after the declaration of independence of Kosovo have demonstrated that the threat of ethnic violence has not been overcome.¹⁷⁸ (In addition to the literature cited above, see Dannreuther 2001:265, Matveeva and Paes 2003:29, Salihu et al. 2004.)

4.3.3 Peace-building: How much is enough?

It is very difficult to evaluate the peace-building efforts undertaken by the international community without including the contribution of civil society. Aside from the administration of the international protectorates almost all peace-building has been a joint effort of state and non-state actors. For that reason, I would like to refer to the conclusions of chapter 7 and just remark in very general terms that peace-building in the area under study still has a long way to go. There certainly have been serious changes and improvements over the last ten or fifteen years, mostly in regard to state-building and a decrease in the likelihood of new violence. The peace agreements have held, and clear progress in refugee return and reconstruction has been made. On the other hand, the ethnic antagonisms have not been overcome, not all conflicts have found a peaceful settlement yet (see the unilateral declaration of independence by Kosovo against the will of Serbia). The economic situation in most countries is disastrous, with high rates of unemployment, migration by better ¹⁷⁷ In the first phase ('emergency phase') most agencies focused on urgent humanitarian needs (shelter, fuel, food, water) to help the returnees survive the winter 1999-2000. In the next 'transition' phase, the international interveners moved along the 'relief-to-development' continuum. The third phase, 'consolidation' began with the formation of the provincial government in March 2002 (Llamazares and Reynolds Levy 2003:7pp).

¹⁷⁸ If the figure of 125,000 Serbs is accurate is not clear – UNHCR is using the figures given by the Serbian government. (Verbal reference by Howard Clark.)

educated youth, and a major source of income coming from international sources, while organised crime is flourishing. Democratisation is in fact more formal than real (see for example Gallagher 2005, the contributions in Dvornik and Solioz 2007 and in Fischer (ed.) 2007, Fischer 2007e and Gromes 2007).

4.4 Addressing Other External Actors: Protest and Advocacy

This chapter has so far provided an overview of the most important instruments that could be categorised under one the ‘grand strategies’ of peace-making, peace-keeping and peace-building. In addition, there have however also been activities that did not directly target the conflict and the antagonists but rather other intervening actors: Though international actors tried to coordinate their efforts, at most points of crisis (meaning mainly the periods 1991-1995, and 1998-1999) there was a lively and partly public discussion under way between different states about how to proceed, and to criticise and influence each others’ approaches.

There were different lines of disagreements that led to public (or discreet) protests and to advocacy among the international state interveners:

- Within the EC, one of the main disagreements was the early approach to the dissolution of Yugoslavia (see above). At various other times too, parts of the EC/EU were at loggerheads with each other. The most public example was in July 1992 when the EC negotiator and ICFY co-chair Lord Owen wrote to British Prime Minister John Major urging the use of NATO to enforce a cease-fire. The next day his letter was published on the front page of a major London newspaper, the Evening Standard, causing great political irritation (see Kaufman 2002:96pp).
- The EC/EU and the USA were often in disagreement on how to handle the conflict in Bosnia. Between 1993 and 1995, the USA tried to convince its EU partners to lifting of the arms embargo and conducting air strikes. That was regularly rejected by those EU countries contributing troops to UNPROFOR since they were concerned about the security of their troops (see Clark 2001:37, Hadzic 2003, Kaufman 2002:100, Krech 1997:82, Lucarelli 2000:44 pp, Meder and Reimann 1996:13, Owen 1995:xvi, Sloan 1998:50).

In 1993 Europeans accused the new Clinton administration of undermining the Vance-Owen peace plan the EC-UN negotiators were trying to get signed (see Owen 1995:101).

- The West (meaning the EU and USA) has had sharp disagreements with Russia regarding the attitude towards Serbia. Russian governments have always expressed political sympathy for Belgrade leading in 1995 to strong protests against the expansion of NATO bombing (see Markovic 2000:205, Meder and Reimann 1996:27, Sloan 1998:77pp). This conflict became more intense in 1998 and especially 1999 around the NATO intervention in Kosovo/Serbia, going beyond the exchange of diplomatic notes and public statements: Russia suspended its membership in the NATO Partnership for Peace, and immediately KFOR was established, Russian troops stole a march on NATO by occupying Prishtina Airport directly after the end of the war on 12 June 1999, almost causing a confrontation with NATO forces (see Mueller 1999:68 and 162, Zitzlaff 1999:53, Buckley 2001:157).
- Between Islamic countries and “the West” there were tensions regarding what the Islamic countries saw as a lack of support for the Bosnian (‘Muslim’) government (see Krech 1997:77, Mellenthin 1992). The OIC continuously demanded – also in the United Nations – to lift the arms embargo and to use ‘all necessary means’ to end the war.

4.5 Prevention

Prevention is a goal inherent in all three ‘grand strategies’ rather than a strategy on its own. Stopping current and preventing new violence almost always go hand in hand where conflicts tend to spread from one geographical area to the next.

Prevention warrants discussion especially because it played a role in a number of civil society activities, especially in advocacy work trying to warn the international state community about new possible areas of war and imploring them to take early action.

The conflicts in former Yugoslavia are not an example of early warning and early crisis management at its best. There was some warning – from diplomatic sources, secret services as well as some NGOs like Helsinki Watch and Amnesty International - but little action before 1991 (see Zimmermann 1996:58pp, 82pp, Gow 1997:204, Lucarelli 2000:16, Eiff 2002:155). When the conflicts first became visible in 1990, members of the international community did little more than meeting with both representatives from Belgrade and the republics threatening secession.¹⁷⁹

Rather, the focus in 1990 – one year after the break-down of socialism in Eastern Europe - seems to have been on ‘democratisation’, meaning pushing for multi-party elections and free market trade. The only genuine preventive measure was the offer of some financial aid by the EC, IMF and USA (see Lampe 2000:328 and 355, Gallagher 2003:39pp).¹⁸⁰ The USA warned the Yugoslav government not to take any violent steps to prevent secession, but also made it clear that they wanted a one-state solution (see Woodward 1995:154pp, 383, Zimmermann 1996:100, 122pp).

The first six months of 1991 then saw a string of visitors coming to Belgrade, sometimes also stopping by in Ljubljana and Zagreb, appealing to the conflicting parties to resolve their differences peacefully, and offering new economic incentives.¹⁸¹ But all these came far too late to influence the process.

After the violent response to the declarations of independence by Slovenia and Croatia, the CSCE activated its newly created crisis mechanism in June 1991. However, it was sidelined by the EC which took over mediation.¹⁸² The CSCE then ¹⁷⁹ Gorbachev visited Slovenia in the course of his 5-day visit to Yugoslavia in March 1988 (‘Gorbatschow ignoriert ,slowenischen Fruehling’ 1988); US Deputy-Secretary Eagleburger visited in February 1990 (Zimmermann 1996:58pp), and German Foreign Minister Genscher met different leaders in August 1988 (Genscher 1995). See also Kalmann 1993:20 and Woodward 1995:136, 145, 149pp.

¹⁸⁰ See also Woodward 1995:385, Dominik 2001:248p, and the newspaper articles ‘Belgrad hebt Preisbindung auf’ 1988, ‘IWF-Kredit an Berlin’ 1988, ‘Auch Japan will fuer UdSSR nicht zahlen’ 1990.

¹⁸¹ In early March a delegation of the Council of Europe came, and soon after an EC Troika (representatives of the past, present and future EC presidency) visited Belgrade. They offered some ‘carrots’ in form of prolongation of the financial aid (credits) until 1995 and to increase them by 30% to 1.5 billion German Marks (around 750 million Euros). In early May EC President Delors and Prime Minister of Luxembourg Santer visited Belgrade and also met with Slovenian president Kucan. Delors promised to request US$4,5 Billion in aid from the EC in support of Yugoslavia’s commitment to political reform. Italy in May argued for an aid packet to Belgrade – a policy which it reversed after visits by Kucan and Tudjman in early June. The last visitor before the declarations of independence then was US Secretary of State Baker who came on 21st of June, stating that the US would support a democratic and undivided Yugoslavia, and would not recognise unilateral secessionist moves. See Woodward 1995:161, Zimmermann 1996:133pp, Holbrooke 1998:27, Eisermann 2000:33, Markovic 2000:18pp, Judah 2002, Kaufman 2002: xiv and 67.

¹⁸² This crisis mechanism consisted first of a request of clarification on what was going on by the government of Yugoslavia. The second step then was to call a meeting (in July) of the CSCE Council of the Senior Officials in Vienna. This meeting agreed on an Urgent Appeal for a cease-fire in Slovenia, to conduct a diplomatic mission to Yugoslavia for mediation, and offered the sending of an observer mission. Two later emergency meetings in August and September 1991 repeated the calls for ceasefires and negotiations, and adopted the arms embargo of the EC. See started to focus more on the situation within what became in 1992 the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

In the case of Kosovo the general perception within the territory and from many critics outside is that Kosovo did not receive any international attention before 1998. This is not entirely correct. The Council of Foreign Ministers and the Commission of the EC/EU were certainly interested in Kosovo from 1991 on, and frequently called on FR Yugoslavia to restore the autonomy of Kosovo and Vojvodina. The CSCE sent one of its first long-term missions in 1992-93 to Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina had to withdraw it when Belgrade did not extend its permission in summer 1993, while a special Working Group set up by the ICFY also accompanied the processes there from 1992 onward (see Becker 1991:944p, Woodward 1995:175, 295, Meder and Reimann 1996:4pp, Libal 1997:17, Troebst 1998:26, Weller 1999:18, Lucarelli 2000:19, Markovic 2000:54pp). The Kosovo issue also played a central role when the EU decided in 1997 to set up a Conflict Prevention Network whose main function was as a think-tank on conflict prevention and early warning for the EC Commission.¹⁸³ However, decisive action was only taken by the international community when the nonviolent movement had broken down and was replaced by an armed uprising in 1998.

Macedonia is often cited as a successful example of prevention because it was not drawn into the wars in the 1990s. This is mostly credited to the long-term human rights work of the OSCE in the country, and the presence of the first-ever preventive peace-keeping force since end of 1992.¹⁸⁴ However there were few signs of early action in response to indicators of possible conflict after 1999 such as the influx of about 350,000 Kosovar refugees, including the relocation of UCK fighters from Kosovo to Macedonia (UNHCR 1999c, Vankovska 2002:5, International Crisis Group 2004c). Two years later, however, there was a prompt and determined reaction from the side of the international community when violence eventually broke out in 2001 (see Gallagher 2005).

Becker 1991:944pp, Woodward 1995:175, Meder and Reimann 1996:4, Libal 1997:14pp and 44, Lucarelli 2000:19, Kaufman 2002:21).

¹⁸³ The CPN was directed at that time by the Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik in Eberhausen, and commissioned pilot studies on Zaire and Kosovo (see Troebst 1998:51.)

¹⁸⁴ The 'OSCE Spillover Mission to Skopje', established in 1993, had the dual function of early warning and conflict prevention. And the OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities opened an office in Macedonia in 1992, visiting the country in person more than 50 times between 93 and 2001. On the OSCE in Macedonia, see Ackermann 2000:130pp, Miall 1999/2000:41, Rogier 2001, Ungaro 2001, van der Stoep 2001, Broughton 2002:270, Zellner 2002:21pp, Paes 2002:237p. .

4.6 Conclusions

This chapter has focussed on the effects of the interventions by international state actors on the conflict on the ground, characterised above all by intensive mediation efforts, military intervention and the commitment of enormous financial resources of which the total sum remains unknown. The picture drawn is one of successes and failures – the open violence eventually was (more or less) controlled, but usually late and coming with a high price that mostly the local population had to pay, and the post-war environment is riddled with economic and social problems.

One important observation of particular relevance later in this study when looking at the activities of civil society actors is that violence was the easiest means to attract international attention. This is especially true for Kosovo which had been very much on the back-burner of international attention. The conflict there was seen through the lens of human rights and minority law rather than as the case of a majority population struggling with unarmed means for its independence. One of the Kosovo-Albanian negotiating team concludes:

The break-up of the former Yugoslavia has demonstrated that only war attracts the attention of the great powers. Only the use of violence serves as a catalyst for political solution, compelling the West to rush in to prevent conflict spreading throughout the region (Surroi 2001).

This observation is definitely a challenge for those seeking nonviolent alternatives. Furthermore, however, violence was not only a recipe for local actors to attract attention but also often the only recognised means of solving conflict. As argued above, the general lesson most state actors took from the former Yugoslavia was ‘our interventions need to be based on a credible military threat and military capacity’. Therefore the successes of civilian peace-keeping in the region (see 4.2.2) were largely ignored. Instead, military forces were deployed to protect international civilian personnel even in contexts where there was very little threat as in Macedonia 2001.

In this sense, the conflicts in former Yugoslavia did damage far beyond its primary victims in the countries in war. The conflicts, and the ways they were handled by the international interveners strengthened the position of those who can only imagine international politics being successful when based on violence.

In the next chapters in discussing the contributions of civil society actors to the interventions in the former Yugoslavia, we will frequently notice how this tension between violent and nonviolent approaches shaped the overall picture of what was done (or not done) in regard to dealing with the violent conflicts in this area.

5. Working Towards a Settlement of Conflict: Peace-making by Civil Society Actors

Having looked at the core concepts relating to conflict intervention, the history of the area of former Yugoslavia and the interventions undertaken by state actors, it is now time to turn to the activities of civil society actors. In this and the next chapters I will describe these activities using the overarching categories introduced in the previous chapter: the three 'grand strategies' of peace-making, peace-keeping and peace-building, plus the more instrumental strategy of information, protest and advocacy that aims to influence other intervening actors.

Peace-making, the topic of this chapter, has been defined as working as an external party towards a settlement of the conflict through either law, negotiation or the exercise of violence and/or other forms of power. There are not many publications discussing the contribution of civil society actors on peace-making in the former Yugoslavia. Besides The War Next Door by Judith Large (n.d.) and two small books on Kosovo (Troebst 1998, l'Abate 1997) most publications dealing with civil society actors focus on (mostly post-war) peace-building.

Looking at the different examples found, they all fall into the category of peace-making by negotiation in a wider sense. It seems feasible to categorise them according to the level of society they targeted, following Lederach's (1997:38pp) distinction between top, middle-range and grassroots leadership in conflict. Top level mediation aims at direct impact, expecting the leaders to change their behaviour. Initiatives targeting the middle-range leadership are based on much more indirect mechanisms, be it influencing those who then can influence the decision-makers (e.g. second-track problem-solving workshops), or be it supporting and/ or influencing the opponents of the decision-makers in the hope that there will be sooner or later a change in power. And at the grassroots level, most conflict settlement efforts were not focused on the overall conflict as much as addressing more concrete matters at hand or the situation in a particular locality or municipality.

5.1 Top Level Peace-making

The most important cases here are the mediation by the former US President Jimmy Carter in Bosnia-Herzegovina, and the Catholic Community of Sant' Egidio in the Kosovo conflict.¹⁸⁵

5.1.1 Jimmy Carter in Bosnia-Herzegovina

After the end of his term as President, Jimmy Carter together with his wife Rosalynn founded in 1982 a NGO called the Carter Center, based in Atlanta, USA, to “advance human rights and alleviate unnecessary human suffering, seeking to prevent and resolve conflicts, enhance freedom and democracy, and improve health” (The Carter Center 2008, Mission Statement). As an elder statesman, Carter himself has offered mediation services in a number of conflicts.

In the former Yugoslavia Carter got involved in December 1994, mediating a temporary four month cease-fire agreement in Bosnia-Herzegovina (Owen 1995:309pp, Sloan 1998:37pp, Weiss 1999:124, Markovic 2000:183pp). The agreement was made in response to a six-point peace plan proposed by Bosnian Serb President Karadjic in a CNN interview on 14 December, Carter visiting both Bosnian leaders - Izetbegovic in Sarajevo and Karadjic in Pale - as well as President Milosevic in Belgrade.¹⁸⁶ Carter reasoned that it would be easier to reach an agreement on a temporary cease-fire than getting all sides to commit to a formal overall peace plan. Such a temporary agreement, he hoped, could then be the first step towards substantive peace talks.

¹⁸⁵ There have been some few others. For example Owen (1995:242) mentions a private citizen, a Serb by birth, living in Paris. Being a successful publisher, he was, in Owen's words, always ready to host private meetings with Yugoslavs. He did arrange such a meeting between Muslims and Serbs in Geneva in December 1993, and with Krajsnik in January 1994. Unfortunately I have not been able to find any other source on his activities.

A case of another high-profile individual mediating was US Senator Jesse Jackson. In May 1999, during the NATO war on the FR Yugoslavia, he negotiated the release of three US soldiers taken prisoner by Belgrade (Clark 2001:288p).

¹⁸⁶ Owen (1995:309) believes that there was prior communication between Karadjic and Carter, speaking of a 'prearranged statement' by Carter in which he announced he would visit Pale after the CNN interview.

The mediation effort was coordinated with the United Nations, and included a four months truce meant to last from January to May, a separation of forces, the withdrawal of heavy weapons and the inter-positioning of UNPROFOR along the line of confrontation, freedom of movement for UNPROFOR and UNHCR, the exchange of detainees, and compliance with earlier agreements concerning Sarajevo, Gorazde and Srebrenica.¹⁸⁷

The ceasefire held de facto only until March-April 1995. By that spring, both parties had regrouped and started new military campaigns, beginning with a Bosnian Government offensive near Tuzla (Sloan 1998:38). I am not aware of any deeper evaluation of Carter's initiative but, looking at the events in later 1995, see no indication that the cease-fire was a first step towards the all-encompassing (Dayton) peace talks as Carter had hoped. Its main positive outcomes lay probably on the humanitarian side, helping people to get over the winter in Bosnia without the additional hardship of actual fighting.

5.1.2 Comunità di Sant'Egidio in Kosovo

The second high-level mediation was about another conflict the Kosovo conflict. The Comunità di Sant'Egidio is a Catholic lay organisation often considered to be an instrument of informal diplomacy of the Vatican (Weller 1999:127).¹⁸⁸ Established in 1968 as a humanitarian organisation, today it has around 30,000-50,000 volunteers worldwide. Through its commitment to inter-religious and ecumenical dialogue, the Community has built up a reputation for mediation although, as most mediation happens outside the public sphere, not very much is known about this side of their work. Their biggest success has been mediation in the Mozambique conflict in 1989 – 1992 (see Paffenholz 2001c, Cereghini and Sighele 2002:126-137). They were also ¹⁸⁷ The Contact Group however seems to have had mixed feeling about Carter's initiative because their policy at that point was that there were to be no negotiations before all sides committed formally to the peace plan the Group had devised. And the Bosnian President Izetbegovic and his government were unhappy about Carter speaking with the leaders of the Bosnian Serbs in their capital Pale, thereby giving them legitimization. On the other hand Owen claims that he and his co-chief negotiator Stoltenberg took, in Owen's words, 'a positive attitude to this' (Owen 1995:309).

¹⁸⁸ The Community's webpage has little information on their political work. See <http://www.santegidio.org/> [accessed 22 April 2008].

involved in Guatemala and Algeria, and had been active doing humanitarian work in Albania since the 1980s.

The Community's work in Albania provided the basis for involvement in Kosovo. President Rugova visited their Community in Italy in 1993.¹⁸⁹ In 1996-98 the Comunità di Sant'Egidio mediated between the Kosovar leadership and President Milosevic on the re-opening of the Albanian schools (see de Vrieze 2002:291 and 87pp.¹⁹⁰) The closing of Albanian-language schools and the university in Prishtina by Serbia was not only highly contentious but of symbolic importance to the conflict. The Community called their work 'help for dialogue and communication', not using the term mediation.¹⁹¹ According to l'Abate (1997:21, 89), they first created a list of problems faced by the civilian population in Kosovo, then chose the issue of education as being most suitable to deal with first, and then had a number of meetings with both sides at different levels, helping them to exchange materials and proposals.

This mediation, which was supported by both the EU and the USA, was successful insofar as it led to an agreement for the reopening of schools signed by Milosevic and Rugova in Belgrade on 1 September 1996.¹⁹² A mixed Serb-Albanian group was set up to negotiate its implementation but at first failed to do so.¹⁹³

In summer 1997 San Egidio renewed its mediation attempts, and managed to get the working group to meet in October 1997 and February 1998. In March 1998 an Implementation Agreement on Education was signed that planned the reopening of the Prishtina University in several steps, as well as the reopening of elementary and

¹⁸⁹ The Kosovo conflict had continued throughout the 1990s in the form of open state repression and nonviolent resistance against the Serbian rule by the Kosovo Albanians (see chapter 3).

¹⁹⁰ The mediation efforts are also mentioned and described in Milosevic 1996, l'Abate 1997:21, Troebst 1998, Riskin 1999, Weller 1999:93, Clark 2000:125, Lund 2000c:195, Appleby 2001:828pp and Cereghini and Sighele 2002.

¹⁹¹ Probably due to the diverse meanings of the term 'mediation' which is often understood to be a negotiation effort with a very active and dominant negotiator. See Chapter 2.

¹⁹² It immediately earned international recognition and in the next year was often referred to in official documents of intergovernmental bodies (EU, Contact Group, USA, Council of Europe, OSCE, WEU).

¹⁹³ Troebst (1999:78) maintains that the agreement was flawed with technical mistakes and weaknesses, for example there were different translations in Albanian and Serbian language, with the Serbian version not mentioning university students. It was also unclear if students would return to state-run education or if the university buildings would be turned over to them. And there was no time-table for implementation.

high schools, and naming Sant' Egidio as the institution to assist with the different steps to be taken, including 'finding a solution for possible problems which could emerge' in the context of the reopening of schools.¹⁹⁴ Eventually the university buildings were handed over in 1998 (after having been vandalised, see Clark 2000:157).

5.2 Middle Level Peace-making

At this level of society, it was possible to distinguish three different approaches to peace-making: problem-solving workshops, creation of safe spaces for ongoing dialogue between middle-level opposition leaders, and the propagation of possible solutions by international civil society actors.

5.2.1 Problem-solving Workshops

Middle level peace-making in the context of the former Yugoslavia mostly took the form of what is called second-track problem-solving workshops. A well-established method, their basic idea is to bring together influential personalities from all sides in the hope that they would develop a more positive attitude towards opponents through meeting face-to-face, come up with possible solutions of the conflict at large, and filter these up to the decision-makers on their respective side.¹⁹⁵

In my survey of external interventions in the former Yugoslavia there were many examples of such initiatives, using comparable methods if not the exact term 'problem-solving workshop'. Most were focused on the Kosovo conflict, but there has been also at least one case in Croatia. To give just four examples:

- The International Helsinki Federation (IHF), an international organisation monitoring the compliance with the human rights provisions of the Helsinki Final Act, has had three national committees in FR Yugoslavia, in Serbia, Montenegro and Kosovo. It was therefore in a good position to support peace-making in the Kosovo conflict. Among other activities, it helped - with support of the Executive Director of the IHF - to arrange a meeting of Serbian and Kosovo Albanian intellectuals in Montenegro in June 1997, with a follow-up meeting in Prishtina 20 February 1998. The meetings ended with an appeal for a peaceful solution and continued dialogue (Troebst 1998:95p).

¹⁹⁴ The texts of both agreements are documented in Weller 1999:93-94.

¹⁹⁵ The method was first identified and described by Herbert Kelman (see Kelman 1996). Several international NGOs, among them International Alert and the Berghof Center are practitioners of the approach in various parts of the world.

- The German Bertelsmann Foundation is a foundation of a publishing house which engages in advocacy work on different national and international issues, advising the European Union and individual governments. Between 1996 and 1998 they (together with the Munich University Research Group on European Affairs) ran a project on Kosovo, bringing together seven Kosovo Albanian and Serbian intellectuals in several meetings where in small groups They discussed and later published recommendations on questions such as how to improve the given situation, how to achieve an extended autonomy and how to realise independence (l'Abate 1997:107pp, Troebst 1998:88pp).
- After the end of the NATO war of 1999 the US Institute for Peace (USIP), a congress-funded quasi-NGO ('Quango') from the USA, facilitated meetings between a spectrum of Albanian and Serb political and community leaders, discussing a wide range of topics concerning reconstruction and co-habitation (de Vrieze 2002:298).
- Large (n.d.:75) mentions one case of a mediation attempt in Croatia in 1995 by the German Foundation Die Schwelle (The Threshold) who sought to bring together representatives from Baranja and Osijek for 'a negotiation process parallel to that of Erdut'.¹⁹⁶ The goal of The Threshold according to Large was to have a people's agreement supporting what the high level negotiators hammered out in Erdut, but the attempt failed.

¹⁹⁶ 'Erdut' was the agreement on Eastern Slavonia which allowed a peaceful reintegration of that part of Croatia into Croatia under the supervision of a UN Mission in 1996-1997.

5.2.2 Supporting the Political Opposition

Support to the opposition – political parties, NGOs, independent media, other leaders – may fall under the categories of peace-making or of peace-building, depending on the context and the objectives of the activity. The literature usually treats this as a typical approach in state-building and democratisation (see Carothers 1999, Call and Cousens 2007). As such it will be discussed further in the chapter on peace-building. However, I would argue that supporting the political opposition could also be considered an element of peace-making, namely when the goal is to help the opposition formulate alternative solutions to the conflict or suggestions on approaches how to settle it.

The difference from problem-solving workshops is less the method than the assumption about how to achieve an impact: Problem-solving workshops normally address people who are part of or close to the current regime and government, hoping that to influence decisions at their level. Creation of safe spaces for meetings and ongoing dialogue between middle-level opposition leaders implies expectations of either a future change of government, or pressure that the opposition puts on the regime in order to force it to change its politics.

In the case studied here, there have been several examples of this approach, mostly in the form of supporting the establishment of permanent institutions or round tables of oppositional politicians and/ or civil society leaders from the different countries of former Yugoslavia. Perhaps the two most important of them will be presented here: the Verona Forum and the Helsinki Citizens' Assembly.

5.2.2.1 Verona Forum

The Verona Forum was created in 1992 and brought together oppositional politicians and NGO and media representatives for consultations and ongoing work on political alternatives to war (see Schweitzer 1992, Langer 1993, Langer 1995, Large n.d.:5).

It began with a 'Forum for Peace and Reconciliation in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia', a conference organised by two Green politicians, the late South Tyrolean member of the European Parliament Alexander Langer, and the Austrian MP Marijana Grandits. They invited around 50 people from oppositional parties and civil society organisations from all countries of the former Yugoslavia to meet for three days in September 1992 in Verona. The conference was also attended by about the same number of international civil society representatives, among them the International Helsinki Federation, the Helsinki Citizens' Assembly and a number of national groups and organisations. The goal of the conference was to discuss new ideas for peace and reconciliation, to initiate and support a positive dialogue between the 'democratic and peace oriented' forces in all states, and to impact the international peace process.

The conference agreed on a final declaration that called for the protection of individual human rights, demanded the creation of a UN protectorate for Bosnia-Herzegovina and immediate international recognition of Macedonia, and also called for negotiations on Vojvodina and Kosovo. Many other items remained controversial, starting from the question of a military intervention in Bosnia-Herzegovina, the issue of sanctions against Serbia, possible sanctions against Croatia, to the question of the status of Kosovo.

The conference decided to set up permanent structures of dialogue, calling itself Verona Forum, led by an international steering committee of people from the former Yugoslavia and third party countries. This Committee met for some time quite intensively by phone or using other conferences as an occasion for personal meetings. Over the next year, it also planned and conducted several activities such as other conferences and round tables, supported free media and established a permanent coordination and communication in the European Parliament.¹⁹⁷ It played an important role in bringing the democratic opposition of the different countries together (Coletti et al. 2007).¹⁹⁸

5.2.2.2 Helsinki Citizens' Assembly

The second permanent structure that served for the exchange and development of possible solutions among politicians and civil society leaders of the former ¹⁹⁷ I lack definite information on when the Steering Committee dissolved. The latest activities that I found were in 1997 (European Parliament 1997).

¹⁹⁸ Many of these activities, however, I would rather rate under peace-building.

Yugoslavia was the Helsinki Citizens' Assembly (HCA). The HCA has been an international umbrella consisting of civil society representatives from all the OSCE countries, understanding itself as a civil society mirror of the Helsinki Final Act from 1975 (CSCE). It was founded in 1990 with a conference in Prague, and throughout the first half of the 1990s held regular international conferences. In the later 1990s its importance diminished and eventually the international office in Prague was closed. Today there are still some national branches (France, Greece) but no visible activities of the international any more.

The conflicts in the former Yugoslavia was a major focus of attention for the HCA, with its first two co-chairs Sonia Licht (Serbia) and Mary Kaldor (Britain) both having a special commitment to the area.¹⁹⁹ The HCA had members from civil society groups in FR Yugoslavia, Croatia, Bosnia-Herzegovina and Slovenia. It served as a space where civil society leaders of the different countries could come together and exchange their views and discuss matters of common concern. One typical event was the 'Citizens and Municipal Peace Conference' held in Ohrid, Macedonia, in November 1992. The chair of that conference, Mient Jan Faber, wrote afterwards:

Ohrid was not a peace conference of like-minded people. Or maybe it is better to say that although everyone was in favour of peace, the majority of the participants from the Balkans were highly aware that they belonged to ethnic groups, and therefore were 'separated' from one another. Albanians from Kosovo, Albania and Macedonia united forces; Serbs formed their own clusters; Macedonians energetically went around seeking support for their national policy to become internationally recognised. Thanks to some pressure and above all the persistence of the participants from outside the Balkans, the conference adopted a plan which was explicitly and exclusively based on the protection of human beings and multi-ethnic communities. (Faber 1993:14)

¹⁹⁹ The HCA like the Verona Forum was multi-functional. Many of its activities rather fell under protest and advocacy or peace-building. For example they organised in September 1991 a Peace Caravan with 400 people from 30 countries travelling from Slovenia through Croatia, Bosnia to Serbia that was focussing on awareness raising of its international participants (see Vack 1996:27, 210 and other sources quoted in chapter 8). There were also many conferences and delegations, appeals and proposals etc. (Solioz 1993). The HCA Youth Network founded in 1997 in Bosnia-Herzegovina brings youth from all Bosnia together for seminars, conferences and trainings (Kaiser 1994, Bekkering 1997, Bekkering 2000:192, Stovel 2000:29, Du Pont 2002:240).

5.2.3 Seeking to Influence the Conflict Parties Through Suggesting Solutions

There have been a number of international organisations that initiated conferences and wrote and published papers suggesting solutions to the conflicts— for example the International Crisis Group, the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, the Hellenic Foundation for European and Foreign Policy or the Aspen Institute Berlin. They usually addressed their suggestions to both local actors and international interveners. L'Abate (1997) and Troebst (1998) both have described a number of such initiatives regarding the Kosovo conflict. The point is that while papers were usually based on fact-finding missions, and conferences usually had participation from people from the region, in most cases the main target group seems to have been rather the international interveners, not the governments or oppositional actors in the countries in conflict (Haensel and Stobbe 2002:25). These therefore would fall rather under the category of advocacy work, treated in this study here as a strategy in its own right, and are further described in chapter 8. I would argue that suggesting solutions to the conflict should be categorised as part of peace-making only if the addressees are clearly the parties in conflict.

One example of a group that sought to do this is the Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research (TFF), based in Sweden.²⁰⁰ They developed a method their head Jan Øberg calls 'conflict mitigation' (see Clark 2000:162, l'Abate 1997:49pp, Øberg 1994, Transnational Foundation 2000, Troebst 1998:85pp).²⁰¹ By that they mean a multi-pronged and multi-step approach. It begins with exploratory research missions to meet with politicians and NGO representatives from all sides. Based on the findings of these missions they then write draft reports, often containing proposals for solutions that are suggested to them during the visits. They share these with the people they met, as well as making them public, and invite the conflict parties to comment on them. The philosophy behind this approach is that people 'own' their conflicts and therefore need to be supported in the process of solving them themselves rather than an external party presenting ready-made solutions (Øberg 1994:147).

²⁰⁰ For some of the other examples given by Troebst and l'Abate it is on the basis of the survey undertaken not clear if they had such contact or not, and therefore their work is not described here in detail.

²⁰¹ Like Search for Common Ground they have had also a number of projects that would be considered peace-building projects.

Kosovo has been one of their major foci right from 1992 on. To give just one example, in 1996 they proposed a three year UN Temporary Authority for Kosovo comparable with UNTAES, then being established in Eastern Slavonia, in order to make space for peace-building efforts and a 'Helsinki-Process' for all the Balkans (Troebst 1998:85).

5.3 Grassroots Level Peace-making

Peace-making is most easily identified when the actors involved belong to the high or middle level of society. In the sample collected for this study, there have been many examples of grassroots dialogue meetings and encounters. However, I would place most of them under peace-building because their objectives were to improve the relations and create a better understanding between people from different sides of the conflict divide. (It must be remembered that these 'grand strategies' are not defined by the type of activity undertaken - for example 'dialogue' - but by the objectives and function of these activities. Few of these initiatives/interventions were concerned with the pursuance of the peace-making task of concrete steps towards a solution or settlement of the conflict(s).²⁰²)

In the literature it has been observed that if in a violent conflict there is peace-making at grassroots level that deserves this name, it is usually undertaken by local 'embedded' actors (see chapter 2 for the concept of embedded actors), not by international ones (see Wake 2005, Paffenholz and Spurk 2006).²⁰³ Also its impact is rarely the conflict at large but rather the concrete manifestation of the conflict at local level, though there have been exceptions to this second observation in other parts of the world.²⁰⁴ Although the activities of local civil society have not been the primary focus of this study here, by including such ‘embedded’ parties who intervene in the conflict in their own country in a study on conflict intervention, I hope to counteract any false impression that on the ground there was only conflict and war, and peace only came from abroad.

²⁰² Ropers distinguished four types of dialogue, one of which is "dialogue as pre-negotiation". But this type is based at the middle level of society and includes problem-solving workshops and the like (Ropers 2004:179). The other three – "dialogue as grassroots peace building and interpersonal reconciliation", "dialogue projects combined with individual capacity building", and "dialogue projects combines with institution building, networking, and practical projects" fall under peace-building.

²⁰³ However, international actors often engage in what is called 'micro negotiations' or, in the language of the United Nations, 'humanitarian negotiations' (Goodwin 2001:122pp, McHugh and Bessler 2006). This refers to concrete negotiations on the ground, dealing with local matters, and is often needed in order to fulfil the mandate of the organisation in question, for example negotiating permission to deliver goods to IDPs in a certain area. In the words of Jan Egeland in the preface to a recent UN guide to 'humanitarian negotiations': "Every day, humanitarian workers are faced with situations that require some form of negotiation, from seeking agreement on how best to access those in need, to reaching an understanding with other actors of how best to protect civilians in times of armed conflict" (cited in McHugh and Bessler 2006:iii). This is clearly related to local-level peace-making but the scope of its impact is even more limited.

There is one case of such local peace-making documented. It took place in Gorski Kotar, a mixed Croat-Serb region close to Rijeka in Croatia (Wintersteiner 1994:226). In November or December 1991 a Croat village and a Serb village, two villages linked by a traditional friendship, started to build barricades – which in other parts of Croatia had been the prelude to open fighting. In spite of strong reservations by the others in his village a retired Croatian philosophy professor who belonged to the leadership of his village went together with two other people went over to the Serb village. Promising that his village would remove its barricades, he convinced the other village to do likewise. After that visit, his village dismantled its barricades. In January he returned to the Serb village. Despite the tension and distrust finally also the Serb village removed its barricades, and answered with a counter visit in May. Since then the two villages continued good relations, the project of a ‘peace school’ was born (see chapter 7), and a peace memorial created.

5.4 Conclusions

Thousands of NGOs and other non-state actors have involved themselves in one way or another in the conflicts in former Yugoslavia. Nevertheless, given what we know today about the possibilities and restrictions civil society faces when intervening in

To give one example: from 1998 on Pax Christi Germany ran a community project in the small town of Benkovac, in the Croatian Krajina. Their peace workers mediated between a Serbian family returning to their house (which they had fled during the 1995 Croatian reconquest) and the ethnic Croatian family who had lost their own home and moved in here. After some ‘shuttle’ mediation both sides agreed to meet and developed an understanding that they shared a problem. The result was that they both shared the house for some time (Meyer 2000:314).

²⁰⁴ For example the region of Wajir in Kenya where a local women's group managed to initiate a peace-process for the whole region. See Mathews 2001, USAID in <http://eastafrika.usaid.gov/en/Article.1117.aspx> [accessed 12.11.2008]

conflicts, it is not surprising to see that, there have been very few activities which would fall under the category of peace-making. Basically, there have been in this chapter five main types of activities distinguished:

1. High level mediation, aiming at finding a solution to issues related to the 'big conflict'.
2. Second track conflict-solving workshops, aiming at the middle-level leadership with the expectation that peace-making suggestions would 'trickle up' to the top-level leaderships.
3. Creation of safe spaces for ongoing dialogue between middle-level opposition leaders, with the expectation that they would be instrumental in bringing about a power change and then their voice would count.
4. Activities aiming at bringing proposals for solutions to the forefront of discussion in the target countries, with both power-holders and opposition as target groups.
5. Grassroots mediation seeking to find solutions for conflicts at local or regional level, seeking to stop or prevent violence.

If the approaches here are compared with those of state actors, it becomes obvious that they all fall under the subcategory of peace-making by negotiation.²⁰⁵ That does not mean that civil society actors in general do not have means of pressure at their disposal, though these usually will remain below the level of direct physical enforcement: There are instruments, such as boycotts, that attempt to apply pressure in favour of a certain solution (peace-making by violence or power) but they have to the knowledge of the author not played a role for civil society actors in the case studied here.²⁰⁶

The high-level and middle level peace-making examples have several things in common, though the basis for comparison is probably too small for any real generalisation:

²⁰⁵ See chapter 2 for the varying terminology of this type of work.

²⁰⁶ Rather there have been a number of organisations acting consciously against the state-imposed embargo against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, by taking (sometimes even clandestinely) humanitarian aid or material support for NGOs into that country.

- They were conducted by mediators with an established name. They were either led by personalities who because of their previous or current public political role had access to political leaders (Carter, Langer, Grandits) or had a longer history of discreet mediation in other conflicts (Sant' Egidio).
- They mostly pursued limited goals (not solving whole conflict but only one step or aspect).
- They were undertaken discreetly, without accompanying publicity.
- They did not use 'sticks and carrots'.
- They were coordinated with and supported by state actors.

The two high-level mediations were successful looking at the immediate outcome though neither of the two was of longer-lasting impact. The middle level examples show little success that can be easily grasped and offered as an example. On the basis of the information collected, it can only be speculated that there was a longer-term effect achieved through the different workshops and meetings in the field of longer-term peace-building because people became acquainted with each other and began to develop some trust.

The grassroots peace-making is mostly dealing not with the conflict at large but with localised or otherwise limited issues which are related to the overall conflict, but whose solution would not mean an end to that overall conflict.

This rather short chapter looked at peace-making, one of Galtung's three 'grand peace strategies'. The next chapter will turn to the second of these strategies, peace-keeping, which shares with peace-making its comparative small number of examples.

6. Preventing and Stopping Violence: Peace-keeping by Civil Society Actors

The function of peace-keeping has been defined as the prevention of direct violence through influence or control of the behaviour of potential perpetrators.²⁰⁷

There were many instances of military peace-keeping as well as unarmed peace-keeping by state actors in the area of the former Yugoslavia (see chapter 4.2).

However, peace-keeping by civil society actors was – unlike the situation in some other countries - relatively rare. Preventing and stopping violence by addressing the potential perpetrators has mostly been just one function among several of the different projects and organisations in question.²⁰⁸

As to the sources, there is quite good documentation on several of these projects through books and articles, but to my knowledge no publication discussing ‘peace-keeping by civilian actors’ specifically in the area of former Yugoslavia.

The following analysis distinguishes between three different kinds of civil society peace-keeping projects.

1. Longer-term projects,
2. Projects assuming protective roles in certain situations, and ²⁰⁷ That is the difference to other forms of protection that target rather the victims than the perpetrators. To give an example: Finding a safe place for a refugee to stay means to protect him or her against further violence. But it is not peace-keeping but an action of humanitarian relief that has been categorised in this study as peace-building. The same is true of the protection work of the International Committee of the Red Cross. During the wars in Croatia and Bosnia they regularly negotiated the exchange of detainees and visited Prisoners of War (see Morillon 1993:151p, Mijovic 2001:172, King, Dorn and Hodes 2002:28p). So for example they made it possible in September 2002 that 1,600 former detainees from Bosnian camps were evacuated to Karlovac in spite of Croatia first being unwilling to accept them (Owen 1995:55), and soon after in October played a crucial role in the agreement by all warring parties in Bosnia to set free all prisoners of war (Krech 1997:73, Markovic 2000:70).

²⁰⁸ Those interested in studying civilian peace-keeping would need to look to other cases: Israel/Palestine, Sri Lanka, Philippines, Indonesia, and a number of Latin American countries where protective accompaniment has become a standard strategy for nonviolent interveners. In the last ten years there has been a growth both of practical experience and of theoretical reflection on civilian peace-keeping little known in the 1990s. That it received less attention before than is already indicated by the fact that – aside of perhaps a few articles in magazines and the book edited by Hare and Blumberg (1977) - the first scientific studies on this topic only came out in the middle of the 1990s: Buettner (1995), Schirch (1995), Weber (1996), Coy (1997) and Mahony and Eguren 1997 are the first ones I am aware of. See also Moser-Puangsuwan and Weber 2000, Schweitzer et al. 2001, Schirch 2006 and Mahony 2006 for overviews over such projects.

3. Short-term inter-positioning projects like peace marches and the like.

6.1 An Organisation with a Longer-Term Peace-keeping Mandate: The Balkan Peace Team

There is only one example of an organisation that had a longer-term peace-keeping mandate: The volunteer project Balkan Peace Team (BPT) that was working with small teams of 2-5 people each in Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia between 1994 and 2001.²⁰⁹ BPT's overall goal was a wide one: to "promote a peaceful development by maintaining a permanent presence of international volunteers in some crisis areas" (Schweitzer and Clark 2002:29). Protection and support of dialogue were its two foci. In Croatia protection was more important, whilst in Serbia and Kosovo the priority was the support of dialogue between civil society activists. A mandate with six working areas included two points that clearly fall into the area of peace-keeping:

The Balkan Peace Team...

- acts as international observer at the scene of incidents or potential flashpoints;
- Escorts individuals or maintains a presence in threatening situations (Schweitzer and Clark 2002:29).²¹⁰

In Croatia between 1994 and 1999, BPT operated under the name of Otvorene Oci (Open Eyes) deploying two teams of volunteers, one in Zagreb (or Karlovac for part of the time) and the other in Split. There were two main issues around which Otvorene Oci's peace-keeping activities revolved:

The first was the issue of illegal house evictions which was a focus of concern for a number of local human rights groups. In the first years after independence, the Croatian state (or local authorities) tried to evict tenants from flats that had belonged to the Yugoslav Peoples' Army. Victims were usually ethnic Serbs. Accompanying local human rights activists to evictions was one of the first protection-related activities Otvorene Oci undertook in 1994 (see Balkan Peace Team 1994, 1995 and 1996a, Mueller 2006:48). When called to an eviction, BPT volunteers usually did not only come by themselves but also called upon other international agencies and media to be present as well. In several cases the police aborted their attempts to evict the tenant when they found that internationals were present in the flat.

²⁰⁹ The Balkan Peace Team was founded and run by a group of mainly European-based peace organisations, among them War Resisters' International, International Fellowship of Reconciliation, Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung, OEsterreichische Friedensdienste, Dutch Mennonite Ex-Yugoslavia Working Group, Collectif du jumelage (Geneva), Mouvement pour une alternative nonviolente, Brethren Service and (with a somewhat special status) Peace Brigades International. Its coordinating office was based in Germany.

²¹⁰ The other points were identifying possibilities for dialogue, serving as a channel for non-partisan information from the region, assisting in the promotion of human rights, and contributing skills for example through trainings.

The second was monitoring the situation in the former Krajina (UN Protected Areas West and South) after the reoccupation by Croatia in 1995, and again the accompaniment of local activists to the area. In Western Slavonia, BPT together with volunteers from other international projects entered the area within a few days of the reconquest, seeking to establish a continuous presence of observers. One volunteer spent two nights in the house of a local politician who was considered to be threatened (see Mueller 2006:63). Both in Mueller (2006) and Schweitzer and Clark (2002), as well as in the BPT newsletters and special reports (for example Balkan Peace Team 1995 and 1996a), a number of further examples of accompaniment of local activist in this context can be found:

- A volunteer from BPT Karlovac accompanied a human right activist to Western Slavonia for an exploratory mission researching human rights violations and killings (Mueller 2006:64).
- BPT Split in and after 1995 sought to maintain a regular presence in the area around Knin, and made a point of visiting villages in the area and inquiring after people's well-being, specially of the elderly Serbs who stayed behind when the Croatian army reoccupied the territory (Mueller 2006:69pp, Schweitzer and Clark 2002:7, 30pp).
- The Split team accompanied in 1996 an activist from Split when a family from a village in the former 'Sector South' reported the bombing of their houses on the Croatian Statehood Day. The activist and BPT accompanied a representative of the family to the police to inquire about the investigation, and they talked with other international organisations including the ECMM. Afterwards, BPT wrote a public report that was distributed through the international BPT member organisations as well as to international actors in Croatia (see Balkan Peace Team 1996e, Mueller 2006:96pp).

- In another case, the team accompanied an activist from the (Croatian) Helsinki Committee in a visit to two Serbian monasteries in Krajina in order to assess their needs (Balkan Peace Team 1996d).

To assess BPT's strategy, two other points need to be mentioned. The first is BPT's limited ability to develop 'international clout'. BPT was influenced by Peace Brigade International's theory of unarmed deterrence:²¹¹

International accompaniment can succeed in deterring attacks because the decision makers behind these attacks seldom want a bad international image. They don't want the world to know about what they are doing. They don't want diplomats making them uncomfortable mentioning human rights problems in their meetings. They don't want to read in the international press that they are being called monsters or criminals. They will avoid all that if they can. (Mahony 2004:7)

For that reason, at least BPT member organisations expected to build up similar international influence and support (see Balkan Peace Team Coordinating Committee 1998). However, in the event, other than through its member organisations, very little was done in this respect, partly because of simple lack of resources (see Schweitzer and Clark 2002:21 and 39). How much that affected BPT's efficacy is not clear.

The second point is BPT's relationship to the international missions, especially UNPROFOR and EC: Other than in the context of exchanging information or having to request permission to enter certain areas, BPT kept a conscious distance from them. This was partly due to the fact that BPT was an initiative of a coalition of pacifist groups that as a matter of principle did not wish any cooperation with armed actors or governments. But it was also due to BPT's practical experience in the field. In Croatia (and to a lesser degree in Serbia) the international state actors (UN, EC/EU etc) were not well liked, and so not being identified with them gave a strategic advantage to the operation on the ground (Schweitzer and Clark 2002:38).²¹²

²¹¹ Though not being the first or only organisation practising protective accompaniment or intercessionary peace-keeping in Schirch's terminology, it is Peace Brigades International who elaborated this technique the most, and whose name is most linked to accompaniment. According to this deterrence theory, the protective effect of international presence is that of an indirect threat – the threat with an international reaction in case an attack or human rights violation occurs in the presence of the international monitor / accompanier, thereby increasing the political cost. See Mahony and Eguren 1997 and Mahony 2004 and 2006.

²¹² Just to remark on the term 'pacifist': I use this term to describe certain groups in a way it is often used in Germany, that is more or less a synonym for 'nonviolent' but with a more political

6.2 Projects Assuming Peace-keeping Roles Incidentally in Certain Situations

In the last years and in the context of the discussion on human security, it has been more widely recognised that civilian protection may be a function to be fulfilled by aid and development organisations operating in insecure environments, even though their mandate does not foresee this (see Slim and Bonwick 2005, Mahony 2006, O'Callaghan and Pantuliano 2007). While the theoretical acknowledgment may have still been mostly lacking in the earlier 1990s, in practice many organisations found themselves challenged with issues of direct protection.

- International volunteers working in refugee camps in Croatia (see 7.4.1) provided by their presence a certain protection especially for Muslim refugees, as Ruez (1994:74) confirms. The Muslim refugees were merely tolerated in Croatia, and the international presence (and the publicity due to their presence) prevented or mitigated police actions in the camps.
- A second example would be the International Volunteer Project Pakrac. This was a youth and reconstruction project in Croatia run by a Croatian NGO in cooperation with the UN (see 7.3.2.1). After the reoccupation of Western Slavonia in 1995, some other international volunteers in addition to BPT maintained a presence in houses of the minority of Serbs who had not fled during the offensive and were now threatened (see Balkan Peace Team 1996b, Committee for Conflict Transformation Support 2001).
- Especially in the early years after the end of the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina, peace-building projects working there found themselves sometimes challenged by the possibility of interethnic violence especially in the context of refugee and IDP return. While they usually tended to call to IFOR / SFOR in for such cases - for example to escort people visiting graveyards - there were also situations where the presence of the civilian peace or development workers directly provided some protection. So for example one peace worker from the German Civil Peace Service in Banja Luka looked after an elderly widow who had returned to her pre-war apartment but was afraid of being attacked and evicted again (see Pax Christi 2003).

connotation to it – a pacifist organisation would be one that on the basis of its nonviolent approach involves itself in politics regarding issues of militarization and disarmament, rejecting all military means out of principle.

- According to Lambach (2004:8), in Kosovo after 1999, staff from the German Forum Civil Peace Service though otherwise cooperating with KFOR preferred to accompany Serbian returnees themselves in spite of security concerns rather than calling KFOR because they feared that KFOR's presence would provoke extremist forces.
- Many local NGOs, especially the women, anti-war and human rights groups had international volunteers working with them. Sometimes these volunteers were deployed by a peace service organisation, sometimes they just came on their own (see 7.7.5.2). As several activists from Croatia confirmed in personal talks and interviews conducted at the occasion of a War Resisters' International meeting in Ohrid 2004, having these internationals around gave the local activists protection.

6.3 Short-term Inter-positioning Projects

The third type of activities with clear peace-keeping functions have been a number of 'peace marches' that took place between 1992 and 1995 in Bosnia-Herzegovina, as well as one small action in Kosovo in 1998.²¹³ They can all be classified as a form of 'inter-positioning' (see Schirch 1995).²¹⁴ The basic idea of inter-positioning is to stand between two warring parties and stop the violence because these parties would hopefully refrain from attack knowing that the first casualties would be the nonviolent activists. However, most of the examples presented below tended to prioritise 'witnessing' and 'expressing solidarity', with the inter-positioning function as secondary though clearly recognizable.²¹⁵

²¹³ I am not counting the 1991 Helsinki Citizens' Assembly 'peace caravan' among their number because its objectives were public protest and education of the international participants (see Buro 1997:122p, Vack 1996:27, 210).

²¹⁴ I have personal knowledge of three of the actions described in this chapter, having participated in 'Solidarity for Peace' and 'Mir Sada' as well as co-organised 'Sjeme Mira'.

²¹⁵ "Witnessing" refers to a Christian concept. Generally it means expressing one's beliefs in public. For nonviolent groups it implies furthermore the expression of the nonviolent approach and convictions the group professes. "Public witness is an intentional way of offering our peace perspective to the wider community", write Christian Peacemaker Teams ([online] at <<http://www.cpt.org/about/faq#21>> [20.1.2009]), one of the evangelical nonviolent Christian groups standing for this approach.

6.3.1 Inter-positioning in the Bosnian War

In September 1992 a small group of about 20 participants going went to Sarajevo (Laubenthal 1992, World Peace and Relief Team n.d., World Peace and Relief Team 1993, Schweitzer 1994:59). It was organised by the World Peace and Relief Team (WPRT), a small humanitarian / peace organisation set up by a British citizen living in Austria. The founder and his co-worker and wife, a Fellowship of Reconciliation Austria employee, had been involved in an earlier inter-positioning project, the Gulf Peace Team, in 1991.²¹⁶ The approach of WPRT was to combine humanitarian aid with peace action. They travelled to Sarajevo by road, and then carried out humanitarian work, mostly in the hospital, for four weeks. Their hope was that their presence would constitute a buffer between the armed forces, but there is no indication that this goal was achieved beyond the fact that they were allowed to go in and out of Sarajevo in safety (see World Peace and Relief Team n.d. and 1992).

In December 1992 there was a peace ‘caravan’ with the title ‘Solidarity for Peace in Sarajevo’ which was much larger, having about 500 participants, mostly Italians with perhaps 30 from other countries like USA, Belgium and Germany (see Beati i costruttori di pace 1992, War Resisters International 1994:6, Schirch 1995, Schweitzer et al. 2001-chapter 2, Una risposta alla violenza (n.d.), Cavagna 2007). It was organised by the Catholic Italian organisation Beati i costruttori di pace, founded in 1985 by a Catholic priest named Don Albino Bizzotto, and working in many parts of the world. Like WPRT, they sought to combine humanitarian aid with peace work and from 1992 onwards they had a small permanent team of volunteers in Sarajevo.²¹⁷ The goals of the December 1992 intervention – a 24 hour visit to Sarajevo - were moderate, and did not assume that they would be able to stop the war. They were to promote a peaceful solution of the conflict, to demonstrate that the search for peace is not an exclusive function of governments, be witness to violations of human rights and to living conditions and will to peace of people affected by war. (Beati i costruttori di pace 1992)

²¹⁶ The international Gulf Peace Team tried to prevent the (UN-sanctioned) threatened attack of the Allied Forces against Iraq in early 1991. Up to 250 activists inter-positioned themselves on the border between Saudi Arabia and Iraq in the desert. Iraq evacuated the protesters to Baghdad after ten days of the bombing. The Gulf Peace Team is documented among other places in Buettner 1995, Schirch 1995, Burrowes 2000 and Schweitzer et al. 2001.

²¹⁷ For today’s activities, see <http://www.beati.org>. The page however does not include any documents on the peace caravans described here.

But one of its effects was a 24-hour cease-fire in Sarajevo because the Serbian forces stopped shelling the town for the time the caravan was in Sarajevo, so it can be argued that there was some de-facto inter-positioning by the peace caravan.

In August 1993 Beati i costruttori di pace joined forces with the French humanitarian organisation Equilibre for another, even larger peace caravan with around 3,000 participants under the name Mir Sada / We share one peace (see Tonnis and Carlen 1993, Papini 1995, Schirch 1995, Mueller and Buettner 1998, Schweitzer 2000a, Cozzoli 2002). As in December 1992, there was to be a bus caravan to Sarajevo, with a smaller group of activists intending to stay some time in the Serbian-controlled territory.²¹⁸ To the goals of the previous Solidarity for Peace was added an element of trying to enforce a cease-fire by the presence of the caravan (see Papini 1995:67).

About 2,000 people from Italy, France, USA, Japan, Germany, Britain, Belgium, the Netherlands, Poland, Greece, Sweden, Norway and the Czech Republic gathered in Split, Croatia for the four-week project.²¹⁹ However, various factors - including disagreement on the goals as well as differences in the risk assessment - caused a falling out between the two organisers soon after a first group of buses had left Split and entered Bosnia, and Equilibre decided to quit the action. One for Equilibre's changed risk analysis was that, in addition to the fighting in central Bosnia, the USA had now announced that they were prepared to attack Serbian positions south-east of Sarajevo (Tonnis and Carlen 1993). Shortly afterwards Beati i costruttori also decided to abandon the journey and return to Split because of military action on the road ahead. Only a small group with a couple of vehicles travelled on by themselves, not accepting the authority of the organisers and without their backing. A couple of other buses travelled later from Split to Mostar where a demonstration was held in the Croatian part of the town.

The evaluation of the project is contested. While the organisers considered the visit an outright success (personal knowledge), many participants saw it as a failure since Sarajevo was not reached. As I saw it at that time, the reasons for Mir Sada not achieving its goals were

- imprecision about the goals;

²¹⁸ The original plan had been to create three peace camps, one in each ethnic region of Bosnia-Herzegovina, with 60-80 participants in each camp, and staying for one to two weeks.

²¹⁹ 3,000 according to some sources for example Tonnis and Carlen 1993.

- flawed structure of organisation and decision-making;
- mistakes in relationship to the local peace groups, and
- lack of preparation of the participants. (Schweitzer 2000a)

Local peace and anti-war groups tended to be generally very critical about these peace caravans, as was reflected in an evaluation by War Resisters' International one and a half years later. Referring to the December 1992 and the August 1993 actions the report observed:

Each action has tended to have a powerful personal impact on participants, but less on the situation. The actions tended to express vague, rather general sentiments; the larger actions were an organisational nightmare. Consultation with local groups was also a weakness (War Resisters' International 1994:6; see also Schirch 1995:65pp on the same issue).

After these international projects, Beati i costruttori di pace continued to experiment with inter-positioning:²²⁰:

- During a peace demonstration somewhat later in 1993 a group of activists tried to cross symbolically a bridge between the Muslim and Serbian part of Sarajevo. The action went dramatically wrong, and one of the activists of Beati i costruttori di pace was killed by gun fire (Cavagna 2007).²²¹
- In September 1994, more than 100 people visited Sarajevo to express solidarity with the people who suffered from war, and to symbolically offer a form of anticipated accompaniment to the Pope (who they were demanding should also visit Sarajevo) (Cuzzoli 2002:174).
- In August 1995, 200 people wanted to repeat a visit but were stopped in 15 km distance from Sarajevo (Cuzzoli 2002:174).

²²⁰ There was one more international peace march: 'Sjeme Mira' ('Seed of Peace'), set up in December 1993 by around 20 US-American, Dutch and German participants of Mir Sada who, being dissatisfied with how Mir Sada had worked out, wanted to do a smaller action of their own (Schirch 1995; Mueller and Buettner 1998, Schweitzer et al. 2001chapter 2). The group comprised primarily of activists from Catholic Workers US and the German Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung (Federation for Social Defence) travelled in several vehicles for two weeks through southern Bosnia and Herzegovina, distributing leaflets and some humanitarian aid, and tried to make contacts with people who appeared open towards peace. Its goals were not so much inter-positioning as promoting peace and witnessing the situation. The action as such has been evaluated mostly positively by its participants, but like its predecessors did not leave any lasting impact.

²²¹ While the media immediately blamed a Serbian sniper, Beati i costruttori di pace rather assumes that the bullet that killed Gabriele Moreno Locatelli came from the Muslim side. See Cavagna 2007.

6.3.2 Inter-positioning in Kosovo

Prevention of violence through international presence later came up again in the context of the Kosovo conflict:

In March 1998, the US-American nonviolent group Peaceworkers, an organisation with a long history of direct nonviolent action, sent a delegation to Kosovo in solidarity with the Kosovar students of the University of Prishtina demonstrating in for the reopening of the university and for political freedom (see Hartsough 1996, Hartsough 1998, Peaceworkers 1998, Hartsough 2008). Five of the US-American activists were arrested and deported after a few days in jail. Their action falls under the category of peace-keeping insofar as it was quite explicitly based on methods of inter-positioning and international presence as understood by the initiator David Hartsough. Peaceworkers hoped that their international presence would help provide protection to the Albanian nonviolent protesters and help make peaceful change possible in Kosovo (Hartsough 2008).²²²

6.3.3 Relationship to Other Actors

To conclude this section, two additional observations need to be made. The first is the issue of ‘international clout’. The public relations work around the different marches varied, but at least the main ones undertaken by Beati i costruttori di pace were well documented in Italian and partly also other international media.²²³

The second is about the relations to state actors, especially UNPROFOR in Bosnia-Herzegovina: To access Sarajevo was at that time not possible without at least being tolerated by UNPROFOR that controlled the access to the no-man’s land between the Serbian circle and the government-held inner part of Sarajevo. Therefore, the caravans were announced to UNPROFOR and they gave some degree of support, at least in terms of opening the road so that the convoys could pass. As I remember, there were also offers by UNPROFOR to accompany the bus caravans in the same manner as they accompanied UNHCR convoys, but these offers were turned down to ²²² It also had an aspect of protest and advocacy since called people to make protests to the Yugoslav and US president, and to send support messages to the students in Kosovo.

²²³ And being a Catholic organisation, Beati i costruttori di pace had access to official channels of the Catholic Church.

emphasise the nonviolent and non-partisan position of the interveners.

6.4 Conclusions

Compared to the activities described in the later chapters on peace-building and protest and advocacy, there have been only very few examples of nonviolent peace-keeping by civil society actors in the case study. Three types were distinguished:

1. Longer-term projects with peace-keeping as part of the mandate, with Balkan Peace Team in Croatia being the only example;
2. Protection activities by projects that were about other objectives but who took a role in protection when the situation warranted it;
3. Short-term inter-positioning projects.

Unlike in countries where there are NGOs (international or local) whose main roles are protective accompaniment or monitoring and presence, there were no civil society projects that focussed exclusively on such peace-keeping functions (see footnote 2 this chapter). As with peace-making, civil society peace-keeping was dealing with two different contexts: the ‘conflict at large’ (seeking to stop the war through inter-positioning), and concrete protection of specific people in specific locations (protective presence and accompaniment). The different methods used match well what has been identified in other studies, especially the comparative work by Slim and Bonwick (2005) and Mahony (2006):

- Deterrence through international clout, or rather: connectedness to other international actors.²²⁴
- Protection through building connections to potential perpetrators on the ground.
- In addition it is clear that internationals have a symbolic power as ‘untouchables’ whether or not they could mobilise international clout (BPT in Croatia was not strong on the latter, but nevertheless was able to protect).

²²⁴ However, deterrence is not the only strategy in protection. Slim and Bonwick (2005) and the authors of the Nonviolent Peaceforce Feasibility study (Schweitzer et al. 2001) came to the conclusion that there were alternative sources of protection than deterrence, for example respect for the intervener because of his/ her identity (age, gender, country of origin), his/her role and whom s/he represents (e.g. the UN), law and tradition (e.g. ethics of hospitality), and simply building up trust with all sides.

Other observations to be made are:

- The function of protection has sometimes benefitted from being combined with other types of activities, such as civil society support, humanitarian aid or dialogue work. The connections to different actors made in the course of these other activities could be used when protection was called for. This is clearly shown by the example of BPT as well as of the incidental protection work. The relationship to the international governmental interveners, especially the military peace-keepers, is ambivalent. It seems that the overall ideological orientation of those running projects which they as demonstrating an alternative to military intervention (see the chapter on protest and advocacy) played as much a role as the situation on the ground. Projects run by pacifist groups kept a clear distance and maintained cooperation at a minimal level, which they also justified by finding better acceptance on the ground (BPT). Other – human rights, humanitarian and also peace service organisations – displayed generally a higher degree of cooperation with the military forces (for example seeking out the military peace-keepers as first option for protection), but again there was in the sample one case where this was not done because of the group in question felt that accompaniment by the military increased instead of lowered the risk.²²⁵

Those projects hoping to stop the violence by inter-positioning themselves mostly had very limited success. While their presence indeed in at least some cases led to a reduction of the fighting, the short-term character of their stay made it easy for the combatants to allow for such a break in the fighting without it having a real influence on the conflict. This is not surprising and confirms the findings from other studies (see Weber 2000, Moser-Puangsuwan and Weber 2000, Schweitzer et al. 2001). Inter-positioning with the goal of simply stopping a war has never worked so far for a variety of reasons that have both to do with the character of modern war and with the logistical challenges ‘peace armies’ face.²²⁶

²²⁵ This picture is not surprising taking later cases like for example Afghanistan where a number of NGOs seek to maintain their distance to the international military because being seen as connected to them would increase their risk and jeopardise the work they are doing (Lambach 2004). See also VENRO (2003) for a general statement on the issue.

²²⁶ The Gulf Peace Team in the desert had the attacking air force flying over their heads to Baghdad. And most other ‘peace army’ initiatives never got beyond the planning stage because of insurmountable logistical problems (finance, transportation, access to the war area).

On the other hand the remark needs to be made that it may be ‘unfair’ to evaluate these projects only in regard to stopping violence. They all had other goals as well, foremost expressing solidarity and reporting what they saw back home, while those actions carried out by the Catholic organisation Beati i costruttori di pace also had a strong religious element of ‘bearing witness’ in a spiritual sense that cannot be measured by hard-core social science impact indicators.

Projects dealing with concrete threats of violence in a more limited context have had overall more success. The evaluations of the work of Balkan Peace Team show that it played a constructive role in protection in Croatia.

The question if ‘civilian peace-keeping works’ is of course a wider question that was already addressed in chapter 4, acknowledging that the major projects of civilian peace-keeping in former Yugoslavia were not undertaken by civil society but by state actors (see 4.2.2).

7. Dealing with the Causes and Consequences of Violence: Peace-building by Civil Society Actors

Peace-building has to address both the causes and consequences of violent conflict: Material destruction, and non-physical damage such as traumatising, hatred towards those seen as belonging to ‘the enemy’, break-down of relationships, and the weakening or malfunctioning of structures and institutions. It includes all those activities that address structural issues, relationships between the conflict parties or otherwise seek to reverse the destructive processes of conflict and war, and is by far the category with the greatest variety and largest number of activities. Peace-building is often defined as beginning only after a cease-fire has been agreed (see Boutros-Ghali 1995, Lewer 1999). However the findings in this case study show clearly what was already suggested in chapter 2.2.4.3, namely that the same activities and strategies can be found – only perhaps less frequently - in early stages of crisis escalation and even during war times.

Peace-building activities have been reasonably well documented, including evaluations of individual projects and a few meta evaluations and studies about one or the other type of activity. In addition, I have used minutes of coordination meetings, leaflets and other ephemeral material.

As to the presentation of the findings in this category, I decided to first try to sketch the overall picture in each of nine sub-categories of peace-building identified (see chapter 2.2.4.3) in order not to allow examples that may be interesting but not typical to distort the understanding of what has taken place. For examples, I have looked for either ‘good practice’ or activities that were somewhat out of the ordinary.

7.1 Humanitarian Relief

In chapter 2.2.4.3 it was argued that helping people to survive a war is a first step to reversing its destructive processes, and for that reason aid can be considered part of peace-building. Humanitarian relief and support of IDPs and refugees has been one of the major areas of activities by international civil society in the former Yugoslavia.

7.1.1 Material Humanitarian Aid

During the wars in Bosnia-Herzegovina, two NGOs played a major role as collection points and transmitters of aid to the Muslim and Croat parts of the country: the Catholic Caritas and the Bosnian-Muslim Merhamet (Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1996, different minutes of the [Ex-]Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis).²²⁷ They and other large humanitarian NGOs almost all closely cooperated with UNHCR which coordinated the transports into Bosnia-Herzegovina and the airlift to Sarajevo.²²⁸

What made the relief efforts in the period of the wars in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina special compared to other conflicts is the extent of small private initiatives that went beyond sending money to the accounts of the established aid organisations.²²⁹ An almost uncountable number of small citizen groups collected food, clothes, medicine, tools or other items, and either sent it with one of the larger agencies, or hired a truck of their own to drive it down (see Schmitz 1998:12). The survey conducted for this study identified around 200 groups in Europe and North America being involved in such work, and there is reason to believe that this is only a tiny percentage of the total number. For Germany alone, Klaus Vack, a peace activist whose organisation, the Komitee fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie (Committee for Basic Rights and Democracy), was very involved in humanitarian aid claims that there were 1,700 German groups who rendered aid to Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina between 1991 and 1995 (Vack 1996:14 and 41).

Aside from collecting money and/or buying and sending material aid, NGOs and citizens' groups were also involved in a number of other humanitarian activities

²²⁷ Various known as (Ex-)Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis, 'Koordinierungskreis Jugoslawienarbeit', or 'Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis' (including in the minutes of the meetings), this coordination circle met in Germany almost every month, from 1992 to 1995, exchanging information about the work of different humanitarian and political initiatives. Regardless of how a particular set of minutes are headed, they will be referred to as "(Ex-) Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis". Most projects have been addressed on multiple occasions at these meetings – therefore this summary reference that will be given in several places of this chapter.

²²⁸ According to Cutts (1999:6), by the end of 1995 there were over 250 international humanitarian organisations operating under the UNHCR 'umbrella', with ICRC being the only major humanitarian organisation to operate outside its framework.

²²⁹ This picture is different from that of the Kosovo crisis and war 1998-1999 where there was a lot of protest but not as much individual relief work other than that of established large humanitarian NGOs and of the diaspora communities, though some of the smaller groups that had engaged in relief during the Bosnia war reactivated their efforts and brought relief to refugee camps in Macedonia and Albania. .

during and after the wars of that period: Establishing soup kitchens, equipping hospitals or sending doctors and nurses to increase the number of personnel working there, or bringing wounded children or adults for treatment to third countries.

The motives of these groups certainly varied. Many did it out of purely humanitarian reasons – feeling compelled to help in the face of the reports of suffering, because they had relatives in the region or in some cases also just because they used to spend holidays in Yugoslavia and knew people personally. “We must do something”, “We cannot watch” were key phrases to be found again and again in the descriptions of various small groups.²³⁰

Others, especially groups with a background in the peace movement, mixed humanitarian with political motives. An example is the German Komitee fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie. When the conflicts in former Yugoslavia started, they began to organise humanitarian aid after having participated in the Helsinki Citizens’ Assembly’s Peace Caravan in November 1991.²³¹ They saw humanitarian aid in the context of their protest against the war and as propaganda against military action:

When a war has started and surpassed a certain border, then a dynamic of aggression once started cannot be stopped, unless there are strong forces within the country. In such a situation a weak peace movement can only help people in certain fields. The other is to support those forces interested in peace where bloody conflicts hold sway (Vack 1996:41, translation CS).

This approach was shared by many other citizens’ groups that combined aid with peace-related activities. For example, the Antikriegshaus Sievershausen, a small group from Northern Germany, conscientiously took the aid they collected to all ethnic groups, making a priority of delivering to Serbian victims of war in order to counter-act the prevalent view in Germany that “the Serbs” were the perpetrators and “the Croats” and “the Muslims” the victims.²³² They hoped that through the contacts between the parties that they had to facilitate in order to reach the various destinations of their aid longer-term relationships between the ethnic groups after the war would be possible (Antikriegshaus Sievershausen 1995:244).

²³⁰ See for example Scotto 2001 for Comunità /Associazione Papa Giovanni XXIIIrd, and Arbeitskreis Jugoslawienkonflikt 1995 for the group with the same name in Trier/Germany.

²³¹ That caravan travelled throughout Yugoslavia demonstrating for peace and meeting anti-war groups in all republics.

²³² The Serbian parts of Bosnia-Herzegovina received comparatively little aid from the international community though there were some NGOs that made a point of delivering aid to all sides. As far as I know, it has been mostly the Serbian and Yugoslav Red Cross Societies that filled the gap here, with support from UNHCR (Mercier 1995:128pp).

7.1.2 Sheltering Refugees and Displaced

7.1.2.1 The Overall Picture

As explained in chapter 3, there are no reliable figures for the total of those who were displaced or became refugees during the wars. Estimates speak of 3 million for the Croatian/Bosnian wars in total, up to 1.4 million IDPs and refugees from Kosovo in 1998 and 1999, and 150,000 seeking to escape violence in Macedonia 2001.

Between 1992 and 1995 large refugee camps were created in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Croatia, fewer in FR Yugoslavia, either run by UNHCR, the governments of the host countries, or larger NGOs.²³³ When the readiness of Croatia to accept Bosnian (Muslim) refugees came to an end, many people were sent on to other third countries in Europe, or even North America or Australia and New Zealand.²³⁴

During the NATO war on FR Yugoslavia in 1999, the high numbers of Kosovo-Albanian refugees overwhelmed the neighbouring countries. In Albania and Macedonia, UNHCR together with the World Food Programme, NATO and around 180 to 200 NGOs had to deal with some 800,000 refugees in several hundred camps (see UNHCR 1999a, Wilkinson 2001).²³⁵

The role of civil society actors has not been limited to be partner of international organisations in running refugee and IDP camps. They also have been ²³³ Serbia received hundred thousands of refugees from Bosnia and Croatia. The FR Yugoslavia at the end of the year 2000 hosted still about 390,000 refugees (Wilkinson 2001), or according to the United States Committee for Refugees (2001) even 484,000 of whom close to 290,000 had come from Croatia and 190,000 from Bosnia. In 2007 it were still over 100,000 according to Klincov (n.d.).

²³⁴ Many people also found a place to stay either with families, or moving into empty houses left by those who had fled 'in the other direction'. The regulation of ownership and eventual return of the original owners to their houses has been one of the major tasks in reconstruction in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

²³⁵ Partners of UNHCR in Macedonia were among others Action Contre la Faim, American Refugee Committee, Arbeiter Samariter Bund, Care Australia, Catholic Relief Services, Centro Regionale d'Intervento per la Cooperazione, Danish Refugee Council, HELP, International Catholic Migration Commission, International Center for Migration Policy Development, IFCR, International Medical Corps, International Rescue Committee, Intersos, Italian Consortium for Solidarity, Mercy Corps International, Norwegian Refugee Council and Oxfam (UNHCR 1999a).

- supporting refugees that had come to third countries;²³⁶ and
- They facilitated access of refugees to third countries. This last type of initiative will be described in the following section.

7.1.2.2 Helping People to Escape

In 1993 the plight of those displaced by the war became known to the wider public through intensive media reporting. Many were without adequate shelter in the already overwhelmed neighbouring countries, or still in Bosnia finding that their homes suddenly lay in ‘enemy territory’ and facing immediate expulsion or worse. The first response of civil society in the western European countries was to appeal to their governments to accept larger numbers of refugees, but the EC countries proved to be very hesitant and, when eventually agreeing on quotas, these were considered to be too low by many people in civil society (see 8.2.3). For that reason, in some countries citizens started initiatives to enable displaced to gain entry outside the official ‘quota system’. The example on which I have the best documentation is a German initiative, but there were comparable efforts in several European countries. In autumn 1993 several German groups, mostly with a peace movement background, came together to found a new initiative first called Survive the Winter, soon renamed Survive the War. This initiative used a gap in the German immigration laws. People from non-EU countries could get a three-month visa if they were invited personally by a resident who guaranteed the costs of their stay. Through the network of its supporters and through public appeals, Survive the War found hundreds of individuals, families and local groups, both ethnic Germans and people with a migration background from the area to personally invite refugees.²³⁷ These refugees were either identified in camps in Croatia or later in (quite risky) trips undertaken to areas in Serbian-controlled parts of Bosnia where Muslim minorities were trapped. These invitees usually first stayed with their ‘sponsors’, and then obtained permission to remain since, once in the country, they could not be deported because of humanitarian concerns.²³⁸ The initiative soon had to build its own transit camp close to Zagreb where at some times several hundred people stayed - the average in 1995 was 300. Before the end of 1995, Survive the War had helped almost 8,000 mostly Muslim Bosnians to escape (see Den Krieg ueberleben 1995 and 1998, and the minutes of the (Ex)-Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis 1993, 1994 and 1995).

²³⁶ For example SOS telephone lines, advice centres, psychological support etc. Sometimes groups also sought to hide people who were threatened with eviction (for example Kosovo Albanians or Serbs). See Baglioni 2001:227, Pax Christi Nederland (ed.) 1995 and the minutes of the (Ex-)Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis in Germany.

²³⁷ Later, people were also sent on to partners in Sweden and other countries.

7.1.3 Summary: Relief Work - Almost a Social Movement

For reasons of space, it is almost impossible to do justice to the enormous humanitarian aid efforts undertaken by thousands of groups in response to the first years of the conflicts in former Yugoslavia. While in terms of the impact on the ground, certainly the large organisations (both state and non-state) were more important, for a study on civil society interventions the spontaneous direct help by many small groups and individual citizens are of special interest. I think that the aid they organised and delivered can be considered an important expression of a social movement responding to the conflicts. While this question of a movement will be discussed further in chapter 8, it could be noted already here that it was as visible and present as it was heterogeneous in nature: Purely humanitarian motives (often mixed with implicit or explicit criticism of governmental efforts that were considered insufficient), political motives to help one or the other side identified as the victims of aggression, and motivations to help to overcome the conflict through the aid activity were at least three stand points clearly distinguishable.

7.2 Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration (DDR) of Combatants

As mentioned briefly in chapter 4, DDR has mostly been the responsibility of the international military peace-keepers and the civilian administration where there was one set up, sometimes with the aid of private mercenary firms. Civil society actors – NGOs – have played a role mostly in the third phase, the reintegration of soldiers. Many offered vocational training for former soldiers. Veterans have also been a target group for psycho-social trauma care, and for projects in the context of ‘dealing with the past’. This kind of work on reintegration of soldiers, however, may be better placed in the peace-building categories on reconstruction, economic recovery and social/psycho-social work, with veterans just being another target group, and will be presented below.

²³⁸ Often the refugees found work and were able to support themselves.

7.3 Reconstruction and Refugee Return

The category ‘reconstruction’ refers to the physical rehabilitation (repair or rebuilding) of houses, roads and infrastructure (water, electricity etc.).

Reconstruction has usually been closely linked with material aid as well with the return of IDPs and refugees. In the following section I will first sketch the overall picture, and then turn to one special type of reconstruction project that combined physical reconstruction with all sorts of community activities.

7.3.1 The Overall Picture

It would be a misconception to assume that reconstruction only started after cease-fire agreements were signed. NGOs were active in many areas of Bosnia-Herzegovina long before the end of 1995.²³⁹ After the end of the war, the countries hosting refugees from Bosnia-Herzegovina and Croatia wished them to return which in consequence boosted reconstruction efforts after 1995. Large and small INGOs acted as implementing partners for UNHCR or for individual governments (see Pezer 2002:240pp). The same picture developed after the Kosovo war of 1999.

7.3.2 ‘Social Reconstruction’ and Other Projects with Complex Mandates

7.3.2.1 ‘Social Reconstruction’ in Pakrac

Pakrac is a small town of 10,000 Serbs and Croats in Western Slavonia, Croatia, that was heavily damaged during the fighting s in 1991. With the cease-fire it became divided with a Croatian sector in the centre of town and a Serbian part on the outskirts belonging to the Serb-controlled areas, with UN peace-keepers on both sides of the line between Croatian and Serbian controlled territory. Different UN bodies (Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, UNDP, UNPROFOR) initiated a peace-building project called a 'social reconstruction' project. It sought to implement thoughts that General-Secretary Boutros-Ghali had just formulated in his Agenda For Peace (1992). The idea was to normalize as quickly as possible the inter-ethnic relations between the conflict parties, to contribute through concrete projects of cooperation to the social and economic development of the region, and to help with reconstruction and stabilization of the economic structures. It was hoped that refugees and IDPs would be able to return quickly and live in peaceful co-existence (Boehm 2001:181).

²³⁹ For example the Schweizerische Arbeiterhilfswerk (Swiss Workers Aid) established 18 reconstruction projects between 1994 and 1995, as a result of which 2,800 people were able to return to their villages (Wenger and Perovic 1995:34pp)

In early 1993, UNDP invited several NGOs, both local and international, to participate in the social reconstruction efforts.²⁴⁰ The analysis here will focus on one of the projects, the Pakrac Volunteer Project.²⁴¹ The Croatian partner of UNDP was the Antiratne Kampanje (Antiwar Campaign Croatia –ARK).²⁴² ARK recruited both Croatian and international volunteers for the project, directly or through international partner organisations.²⁴³ By 1997 about 500 international volunteers (average age

²⁴⁰ The UN Social Reconstruction Project did not only consist of the Pakrac Volunteer Project. Care Austria, Austrian Peace Services, Help Age International and UN bodies (UNPROFOR, UN Civil Affairs, UN Police Force) also were involved in it at certain times or throughout the running of the project. UNPROFOR ran check-point meetings, a Parcel Delivery Programme and a Village Visitation Programme, and also helped with the rebuilding of infrastructure (water, electricity, gas, telephone) Help International financed a visiting programme that allowed teams of social workers to visit several hundred of elderly people on both sides of the border. CARE started a project of physical reconstruction of houses, while building materials and tools were financed by a Dutch Foundation (Stichting Fluchteling). This project also ran into problems, and the project could not be carried out as originally planned (the reconstruction of one particular street) but the materials were used by the Volunteer Project and Croatian Workers Brigades' for reconstruction in the town. CARE later then helped to rebuild 33 houses on the Serbian side of the town, and established a revolving fund with the local communities to finance reconstruction. On the Croatian part 100 houses were renovated, but on the Serbian side this number could not be reached due to the lack of building materials. CARE's involvement came to an end with the reoccupation of Western Slavonia, the director of the Serbian CARE timer yard losing his life while fleeing (Boehm 2001:185pp).

²⁴¹ For the general description of the project, see Schultz 1994, Milasinovic 1995, Das Freiwilligenprojekt Pakrac 1996, Vack 1996:175, Centar za mirovne studije 1997, Fetherston 2000:18pp, Boehm 2001, Committee for Conflict Transformation Support 2001, Kruhonja, Ivanovic and Stanic 2002:256p, Large n.d.:75.

²⁴² ARK is an umbrella peace organisation that was founded in 1991 soon after the conflicts in former Yugoslavia developed, with members in Zagreb and in several other Croatian towns (Osijek, Rijeka, Split).

²⁴³ Partners were Service Civil International, International Voluntary Service, Brethren Service, Cotravaux (France), Medjugorije Appeal (Britain), Christian Peace Service and Komitee fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie (both Germany), Group for a Switzerland without an Army -GsoA (Switzerland), Suncokret and Austrian Peace Services.

23-24) had worked in the Croatian part of Pakrac (Boehm 2001:196). They worked on the cleaning and repair of public and private buildings and of a wastewater pipeline. They harvested corn, collected wood for school winter heating, started a youth club giving among other things English lessons, organised sports activities and a jazz dance group. They visited elderly and solitary people, cared for children, set up a weekly local radio show, installed a computer-network in the local school, produced an e-mail news letter and a paper newsletter, and gave workshops on peace education for teachers and elder pupils. A women's group they initiated began to distribute humanitarian aid, to run a laundry and have some other income-generating work through knitting and sewing.

Wilson, who worked himself in the project and afterwards wrote an evaluation of it (that unfortunately remains unpublished), describes the basic idea of 'social reconstruction' as follows:

Spontaneous contacts were gradually extended and systematised, building a base in the 'Croatian' community founded on seemingly innocuous activities (playing with children, language lessons...). Long term volunteers then acted as catalysts in the much more difficult coalescing of a few Pakracani around particular issues and needs, in some cases in groups such as a youth club, women's group, or interests such as a school-based email project. ... Over the next three years these initiatives in turn became springboards for social development and a diverse set of activities and trainings aimed at 'empowering' groups and individuals. (Committee for Conflict Transformation Support 2001)

Having peaceful co-existence as its wider goal, the Volunteer Project sought to work also on the Serbian side of the town. But attempts to cross the border and work on the Serbian side met with many difficulties and little acceptance by the Croats in Austrian Peace Services (OEsterreichische Friedensdienste-OEFD) that will be mentioned at several places throughout this chapter, was founded in 1993, with the Austrian Fellowship of Reconciliation one of its primary initiators. OEFD offered voluntary and unpaid positions of usually 14 months in projects in the former Yugoslavia. They distinguished four types of projects: human rights and peacebuilding; youth and social work; support of higher education (at the universities of Sarajevo and Podgorica); womens solidarity. The volunteers were placed with local projects that they supported through their work. Most of its volunteers were men who as conscientious objectors served did a 14 month period abroad which Austria recognised as an alternative to regular civilian service. OEFD also tried to encourage women to become volunteers, although they had to be financed by other sources. Until the beginning of 2000 there had been 79 men and 16 women doing the service, 10 to 12 at the same time (see Haemmerle 1998 and 2001, Thurswald 2000a).

Pakrac.²⁴⁴ Therefore ARK made contact with the Center for Antiwar Action in Belgrade, an activist group not unlike ARK's members. Part of the Center was the group MOST that worked with refugees and IDPs, combining humanitarian and psycho-social aid with the goal of helping people to handle the conflicts more constructively (see Grupa Most n.d.). MOST joined the Pakrac project in 1994. Their style of work was very different from that of the international volunteer project on the Croatian side. They only used Yugoslav volunteers, and had a much smaller number of people in the field at any given time (in summer 1994: 5). They stayed with families, seeing this "as the best way to gain the confidence and friendship of these people" (Stanisic 1994:4). Most of their work was with children, but there were also group activities with adults. They started a 'House of Friendship' project that they used for workshops on nonviolent conflict resolution, English language lessons, handicraft courses, sports tournaments and other similar activities. For a school they provided books and other teaching materials as well as tennis shoes for children. The women's group produced handicrafts and collected mushrooms and tea and sold it in Belgrade, organised seeds for agricultural products in addition to other activities.

When in May 1995 Croatia re-occupied Western Slavonia, this work was interrupted, though MOST tried to stay in contact, and among other things started to document the casualties of the military operation (Stanisic 1994, Centar za antiratnu akciju 1995, Santic 1995, Boehm 2001).

The project on the Croatian side continued for some time.²⁴⁵ But hampered by lack of funding (international donors more and more focused on Bosnia), the reduced need for physical assistance and ongoing managerial problems made ARK in 1997 decide to close the project (see Bozicevic 1997, Committee for Conflict Transformation Support 2001).

²⁴⁴ Although the volunteers were also used as messengers – as were UN and other NGO staff - by those who had relatives on the other side, carrying parcels and letters (Wilson 1997, Boehm 2001, Committee for Conflict Transformation Support 2001).

²⁴⁵ By the end of 1995, the youth club and the women's group had become independent structures. An Information Centre Pakrac was created together with other NGOs and UN to provide the population with legal and other advice. Conflict transformation training was offered through a group that grew out of ARK for nonviolent trainings, calling itself 'Miramida, and which in 1996 grew into the Centre for Peace Studies. When the Pakrac project closed, the Centre left Pakrac and continued its work in Zagreb.

The evaluation of the volunteer project is mixed. The physical reconstruction seems to have gone well, and a number of houses were rebuilt. The women's groups and the youth club are two other tangible outcomes, and continued their existence after the end of the Volunteer Project Pakrac.

The wider goal of making a contribution to reconciliation between the Serb and the Croatian part of town must be considered to have mostly failed. Even before 1995 when the Croatian military action changed the basic situation, the Croatian inhabitants of Pakrac showed little understanding of the project's non-partisan approach. Indeed, threats of serious physical violence were made against Croatians working with the project. (Wilson 2007). Nevertheless, Boehm concluded that whilst it did not reach its goal to normalise the relations between the two populations, it however was able to contribute to the relations between both sides. So were those Serbs who had participated in the project mostly those who stayed when Croatia reoccupied the territory in May 1995 (Boehm 2001:205).²⁴⁶

7.3.2.2 Social Reconstruction' and Other Complex Projects in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Kosovo

In 1995, some former international volunteers from Pakrac founded a reconstruction project in Gornji Vakuf in Central Bosnia with UNDP funding. Like the Pakrac project, the project in Gornji Vakuf worked at the grassroots' level, combining physical reconstruction with social work with youth, war invalids and women on both sides of the divided town. Its basic assumptions were that the political success of the Croat-Muslim Federation ultimately would depend on reconciliation at the grassroots level, that social normalisation was the first step towards that goal, and that the presence of international volunteers would help toward achieving it (see

²⁴⁶ In addition, a number of concrete problems and conflicts could often be traced to the use of short-term young and inexperienced volunteers (Committee for Conflict Transformation Support 2001, Wilson 2007). On the other hand, Boehm (2001:196) thinks that the most important contribution of the volunteers was through their idealism and their working together with local people. Being young themselves, they reached the young generation, and their presence had a positive impact on the population traumatised by war

Pierce 1996, Centar za mirovne studije 1997, Demichelis 1998, Pierce and Stubbs 2000:159, Scotto 2002).²⁴⁷

Some other INGOs pursued similar projects but with professional (local and international) staff rather than international volunteers and without using the term 'social reconstruction'. What their work had in common with the UNDP-supported projects of 'social reconstruction' was their multi-faceted character, combining physical reconstruction with economic incentives, vocational training and with multi-ethnic social work mostly with children, youth and women.²⁴⁸

7.3.3 Summary: Reconstruction Work - A Highly Conflict-sensitive Task

Projects combining physical reconstruction with peace work have mostly been evaluated positively – provided that the international staff involved had the necessary experience and skills (which was not always the case when young volunteers were used). In general, however, other reconstruction efforts have met with a number of problems. Often refugees were favoured in programmes over those people who had stayed during the war which increased the tensions between these two groups.

²⁴⁷ Soon after, the UNDP also started a third project of 'social reconstruction' in Travnik (Central Bosnia). Where among other things c. 520 houses were rebuilt, mainly for returnees from EU countries, as well as roads repaired. The basic issue in Travnik was to build houses for those IDPs who occupied the homes of refugees, thus freeing accommodation and bringing refugee returnees back to Travnik. See Engberg and Stubbs 1998, Demichelis 1998, Pierce and Stubbs 2000.

²⁴⁸ An example is Pax Christi Germany's project in Zenica in Central Bosnia (Kukla 2003, Schiel 2002, Pax Christi and Forum Ziviler Friedensdienst n.d., Pax Christi n.d.). Pax Christi had been in the area since 1995, working with volunteers in a refugee camp. From 1997 they had one or two longer-term staff in Zenica, and started to focus on the issue of IDPs and their eventual return. The main focus of their work was to support IDPs from four camps and two barracks in and around Zenica, seeking to empower them to make a positive decision to return to their home community even if that was now controlled by another ethnic group, and to prevent irreversible dependency. Other goals were to reduce social tensions in Zenica, increase the readiness to live together with people from other ethnic groups, and thereby contribute to prevent further violent conflict. The Pax Christi staff tried in conversations with IDPs to reduce their fear, negotiated with the administration in the villages they came from, provided building materials and quite early on in the project set up a carpentry workshop. Pax Christi also supported people who had returned with regular visits, connected them if necessary to psychological aid, aided them in their dealing with authorities, linked people to reconstruction programmes of other INGOs and also rebuilt 160 houses and apartments with funding from the German Foreign Ministry and private donations. Through such activities they supported the return of 267 families.

Their second area was social work in two housing complexes in Zenica inhabited by returnees (from Germany), war widows, veterans and Roma. There they supported a kindergarten, conducted house visits, gave sewing and computer courses and set up regular meetings for women and men. As a concrete success they reported that they managed to convince a Muslim-Croat women's group and a Serbian women's group to meet. The project ended in 2003.

Another problem was the different approaches by different NGOs on how to conduct reconstruction projects. For example, Kleck (2007a:111 pp) describes how in the Republika Srpska some NGOs rebuilt houses and handed them over ready while other agencies only gave building materials which caused ill-will among the returnees. A third problem was how to choose whose houses were to be rebuilt. When the internationals made the decision, it was often on the basis of abstract figures rather than on real need. Thus, in the Bosnian Federation, aid from 1994 tended to be distributed equally 50:50 to Bosnian Muslims and Croats, regardless of local demographics or the extent of damage (Demichelis 1998). When the internationals left the decision to the local authorities, they had to overlook the fact that the system was frequently abused. The result sometimes was that people got houses rebuilt they did not need but either sold on or used as 'holiday homes' since they were in fact living abroad.²⁴⁹

An assessment of peace-building work in Kosovo by the Collaborative Learning Projects found comparable problems: For example, when the water system of one ethnically mixed village was repaired, it was overlooked that the reservoir was located in the Albanian sector "As a result, every time the pump broke down, tensions between K-Albanians and K-Serbs escalated" (CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects 2006:45).

7.4 Social and Psycho-social Work

In the survey of peace-building activities, three common types of activities were: international volunteers working with refugees and IDPs in camps, social work with young people, and psycho-therapeutic work, mostly with women. They are important areas of peace-building by civil society actors, and especially the last two are usually considered to be of special relevance for dealing with conflict.²⁵⁰

²⁴⁹ Demichelis (1998) gives an example from Gornji Vakuf One NGO tried to implement a 'Federation-building and multi-ethnic reconciliation project' by repairing structures and infrastructure for joint use by Muslims and Croats, and the World Bank financed the repair of some other buildings. For the project they had to secure authorization of the city's two mayors but these seem to have had only the interest of their ethnic group in mind, trading four (formerly ethnically mixed) central urban apartment buildings that after their repair were used only by one ethnic group. The reconstruction priorities were not those of the people, the project became called "the politicians project". Vocational training was also rejected by the population because the trainers did not come from the area and were only from one ethnic group. In the end the NGO left with two buildings unfinished.

7.4.1 Social Support for Refugees in Camps

Some volunteer peace services and other NGOs found a special niche in providing social support for refugees and IDPs living in camps. This was a field often neglected by those running the camps who were struggling to maintain the basic physical services. Large numbers of short-term volunteers worked in camps during the time of the Bosnia war, playing with children, organising sports, language lessons and discos for teenagers, having coffee with elderly people, setting up handicraft circles of women (the products often were sold abroad, thereby giving the women knitting socks or other items some little income).²⁵¹

The main goal of such work was to mitigate the effects of war and enable grassroots participation in psycho-social post-war recovery. Volunteers who reported about their work also mentioned ‘help people to overcome grief’, ‘signal of solidarity with the fate of the refugees’, ‘a chance for learning and doing for volunteers in an international context’, ‘a signal for the people back home that we do not have to remain helpless onlookers’. Ruez (1994:74) writes that the atmosphere in the camps clearly improved, the aggression of children and young people was reduced, and ²⁵⁰ See different manuals and books on peace-building, e.g. Reychler and Paffenholz (eds.) 2001, Aktionsgemeinschaft Dienst fuer den Frieden (ed) 2008.

²⁵¹ See Koordinierungskreis Jugoslawienarbeit 1992a, Brandlhuber 1994, Ruez 1994, Fuderer 1995, Bauer and Muller 1996, Jakobi-Schwan 1996, Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1996, ICVA 2000.

The first initiative to undertake this type of work off was the Croatian /international organisation Suncokret, founded on the initiative of a Dutch volunteer with the Antiratne Kampanje Croatia (see CFD 1993a, Ex-Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis 1993, Ochsenstein 1994, Anti-War Campaign Croatia 1995, Berndt 1996, Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1996, Vack 1996a and 1996b, Large n.d.:33). It began by inviting international volunteers of all ages to come to Croatia to work for three weeks in the camps. Soon this became an organisation of its own called Suncokret (Sunflower). A number of international organisations supported Suncokret by recruiting volunteers to work side by side with Croatian volunteers.. By summer 1993, Suncokret already had had 400 domestic volunteers and 1000 foreign volunteers from 34 international organisations and from 19 European countries plus the USA, Canada and Australia. By 1996 this figure had risen to 2,000 international volunteers. When Suncokret found that the permanent change of volunteers became a problem, they deployed longer-term volunteers, and also increased their professional staff.

In addition to Suncokret, soon comparable work was done by a number of other international NGOs in camps in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina as well, while FR Yugoslavia's visa restrictions made larger international presence in that country impossible (see Le Meut 1994, Bauer and Muller 1996:157, Krauß 1996, Tullio and Vertucci 2002, Clark 2003b).

adults found new courage. In addition, the presence of the internationals also was a certain protection for the refugees.

7.4.2 Youth Work

Children and youth have been one of the prime target groups in NGO peace-building in all countries of former Yugoslavia, because they “offer strong potential for social innovation and therefore a promising target group for reconciliation work” (Fischer 2007c:234). In Kosovo, half of the population is under 25 years which gave NGOs an additional reason for concentrating on young people there (Llamazares and Reynolds Levy 2003).

Many INGOs initiated youth centres. Some of these projects have been well documented through publications by people involved in the work and/or studies made about them. In Jaice, the German Friedenskreis Halle (Peace Circle Halle) worked between 1996 and 1998/99 together with the International Mennonite Organisation in setting up and running a youth club (see Krauß 1996, Kurschat 1998, Friedenskreis Halle 1999, Weishaupt 1999, Fischer and Tumler 2000, Kurschat 2000, Weishaupt 2000, Klotz 2002a).²⁵² They organised games for children, parties, concerts, English and German language classes, photography and computer courses. After overcoming some initial problems of acceptance in the community and the eventual withdrawal of the Mennonites, the Centre was quite successful and brought Muslim and Croat youth together through the various activities. One indicator used is that the young people decided to form a mixed Croat-Muslim football team (before the war there had been two ethnic teams).²⁵³

²⁵² The Friedenskreise Halle (FK Halle) is a peace group from Eastern Germany that like so many other peace groups got involved in practical work in the former Yugoslavia in the early 1990s.

²⁵³ Another example is 'Mladi Most' in Mostar founded by Aktion Sühnezeichen - Friedensdienste (ASF - Action Reconciliation Service for Peace). ASF is a peace service that was founded after World War II and since then has been sending young volunteers mostly to work with victims of the Nazi regime, for example in Israel and at the sites of German concentration camps in Eastern Europe as a sign of atonement. Today, they have a world-wide programme. See <<http://www.asf-ev.de/en/introduction/>> [17.7.2008].

In 1994, when Mostar was put under international administration, they opened a youth centre 'Mladi Most' ('Youth Bridge') in the Western (Croatian) part of the divided town (see Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1996, Fischer and Tumler 2000:24p, Scotto 2002 chapter 7). It was first a youth club with programmes similar to that in Jaice (language, music, arts, literature, discussion groups). In 1997 it was closed for some months and then re-opened with a new concept, only

The basic idea in these and – as far as I could discern from the material available – most youth clubs or centres has been to promote interethnic contact and eventual reconciliation as well as empowerment of young people to work actively on shaping their future. Typical of this commitment is the following:

We wanted to build an island for the children and youth for whom living in war had become normal because they barely have known anything else, an island where the conflicts between the ethnic groups that their parents modelled and passed on could not reach them. Or where they could learn to handle these conflicts differently than is usual in the world of the adults. (Friedenskreis Halle 1999, translation CS)

Kurschat (1998, 2000), a social worker by training, calls this kind of youth work ‘multi-ethnic or multi-communal social work’. Having himself worked in Jaice, Kurschat lists a multitude of activities typical of social workers but with the implicit function of bringing people together across ethnic or other perceived lines of conflict. According to him, this creates a neutral space or protected area in which people, independent of their ethnic or religious identities, come and do things together, such as attending a computer course or playing football. Furthering reconciliation is rarely made explicit as an objective for fear that approach ethnic divisions directly would be polarising (Kurschat 2000:59). Rather than making ‘the conflict’ the issue to meet about, the activities are used to reflect on group processes and one’s own behaviour, and thereby deal with the conflict indirectly.²⁵⁴

The establishment of youth centres was not the only youth-related activity. The following three types of activities were rather frequent in the sample, and basically pursued the same strategy of bringing together young people from different ethnic backgrounds, hoping that playing and working together would help to overcome the conflict. Some of them were short-term ‘one-offs’, but others were of a more long-term nature.

- Meetings and conferences of young people: A good example for such an activity having a sustainable outcome is an international encounter for young people between 12 and 18 years in 1993 organised by Norwegian People’s Aid in the framework of its youth project ‘Young Voices’. Out of that meeting grew a youth offering programmes (with many cultural activities – music, film, theatre) but not being a meeting point anymore. In 2000 the centre moved to East Mostar (the Muslim sector), and was turned into a local organisation with the name ‘Alternative Seminar Space for Youth Reconciliation’.

²⁵⁴ Though these examples are all from Bosnia-Herzegovina, similar work has been undertaken also in the other countries, in particular in Kosovo.

movement with groups in different ex-Yugoslav countries, the 'Post Pessimists' who maintained links across the ethnic conflict lines throughout the 1990s.²⁵⁵

- Youth magazines: These sometimes were a product of youth centres, but there have also been separate projects. For example did the mentioned German 'Schueler helfen leben' finance a Bosnia-wide paper (Nepitani) that was launched in March 1997 as a bimonthly distributing 4,000 copies gratis. In 2000-2001 it was replaced by a new magazine, IZA, that also tackles political subjects (Fischer and Tumler 2000:36p, Stovel 2000, Scotto 2002, 'Vermintes Gebiet' 2002).
- Holiday camps for children and youth: This was one of the activities of the Komitee fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie. Between 1994 and 2003, a total of 16,500 children from the different sides of the conflict had taken part in these annual summer camps where they mostly engaged in activities like sports, swimming, excursions, dancing, singing and playing (Dieter 2004:6, Vack 1996).²⁵⁶

7.4.3 Psycho-social Assistance

As already shown in some other examples, many relief organisations developed specific techniques, tools and programmes for intervention in the former Yugoslavia. One of them was psycho-social programmes mostly targeting women. The projects pursued different approaches, ranging from individual medical care and psychological counselling to group therapy, women's self-help groups, women's groups primarily engaged in income-generating activities, literacy courses or other types of recreational or educational activities (Agger et al 1999:17pp, 66). Today,

²⁵⁵ Norwegian People's Aid continued to support their work, for example by organizing a conference specially for youth from the FR Yugoslavia in 1994 in Austria, where besides people from Prishtina Belgrade and Subotica also participants from Bosnia (Tuzla) and Croatia (Zagreb) came. During the 10-day meeting that was co-led by Austrian psychologists, they worked on a newspaper, a film and a radio programme. Some months later a third meeting took place in Norway again in which also refugees from Norway participated (Jugend-Netzwerk Europa 1998, Royal Norwegian Ministry for Foreign Affairs 2001, Broughton 2002:273, Du Pont 2002:240, Large n.d.79 and 91).

²⁵⁶ Other organisations have been Beati I costruttori di pace, Classes internationales de Paix, Comuni Padovani per la Pace since before 1994, Corazon del Mundo (Spain), IFIAS (Germany), Peace Bridge Basel, War Child (Britain).

psycho-social care is recognised by international donors as one of the standard categories in peace-building support because of its relationship as explained by Agger et al.:

The overall aim of psycho-social assistance is to promote human rights, reconciliation, and psycho-social well-being. Methods for achieving this should aim at supporting already existing protective social and psychological factors, and reducing the stress factors at different levels of intervention (Agger et al. 1999).²⁵⁷

One of the main drivers for this type of work was the reports on mass rapes of Bosnian (Muslim) women and the existence of ‘rape camps’ where women were kept by (Serbian) soldiers that went through the mass media in autumn 1992. Many women’s groups, both local and international, responded to these reports with fact finding missions and concrete projects on the ground. From the beginning of 1993, international funding for rape victims, mental health and psycho-social assistance started flowing into the region, facilitated mostly through international NGOs.

The initial objective of most programmes was to assist rape victims, but soon it turned out that either the figures were highly exaggerated, and/or women were not willing to let themselves be identified as having suffered from rape.²⁵⁸ Therefore gradually NGOs reframed their objectives so that they offered assistance to traumatised women and children in general (Agger et al. 1999:24).

Many organisations held trainings or workshops on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder in the area and/or placed individual psychotherapists in the field.²⁵⁹

Another widespread approach was to set up gynaecological clinics and shelters offering both medical and psychological care for traumatised women. To my knowledge the first (international) one was started by a German-based gynaecologist who opened a clinic in Zenica. With her supporters from a women’s initiative, Scheherazade, she formed a new NGO called Medica Mondiale that is still active and has branched out to other conflict areas. The centre in Zenica besides offering medical and psychological care gave humanitarian aid to women and their families, and conducted psycho-social programmes. Opened in 1993, it had space for 20

²⁵⁷ Pupavac mentions that ‘psycho-social became a catch term which is rarely defined, and that aid agencies “express confusion over its meaning and the activities it covers” (203:158).

²⁵⁸ The first reports extrapolated from the existing figures, assuming that the ‘real figure’ was many times as high as the cases documented. See chapter 8.

²⁵⁹ See Tauber 2000, Becker 2001, Forum Ziviler Friedensdienst 2002 and n.d.-b, Scotto 2002.

women and 9 children (Scheherazade Newsletter 1993, Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1994 and 1996, Medica Mondiale 1996).²⁶⁰

Comparable work has also taken place in Serbia and Montenegro – traumatisation and rape took place on all sides of the conflict and was not, as some international media made believe at that time, limited to people from one side being the perpetrators and those from the other the victims.²⁶¹

Many of the projects went beyond dealing with the trauma women had suffered – be it from rape, losing their husbands or families to ‘mere’ displacement. They sought to empower the women to reorganise their life, (re-)gain trust and confidence, re-build social networks and develop income-generating perspectives, realizing that solving these problems also did a lot to help with regaining psychological balance. In a 1997 workshop of women involved in this kind of work from the different parts of former Yugoslavia this was summarised as follows:

We have to understand the constant and necessary link between economic survival strategies and psycho social work, never sacrificing one for the other (Medienhilfe Ex-Jugoslawien 1997).

The centres often also engaged in activities that brought people of different ethnicity and all age groups together, just like the different projects described in the earlier sections of this chapter did.

Evaluations of psycho-social projects found that the projects made a significant humanitarian contribution, supported self-esteem and counter-acted loneliness, contributed to social stability through creating opportunities in a safe environment for the re-establishment of social networks, skill-building (literacy) and trust, as well as in some cases helping with income generation (Agger, Vuk and Mimica 1995, Agger et al. 1999, Pupavac 2003). On the other hand they criticise that - at least in the four projects Agger's teams evaluated in Bosnia-Herzegovina - little real participation by beneficiaries was to be found. They generally were seen as helpless and too traumatised, which was strengthened by a strong focus on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder rather than approaching the problems from a human rights point of view (Agger et al 1999:62pp).

²⁶⁰ Other comparable centres have been Vive Zene in Tuzla (run by another German organisation since 1993, see Vive Zene 1995, Smillie 1996), Amica supported by Italian, Swiss and German organisations working in Tuzla, Bijeljina and Vlasenica (see Wenger and Perovic 1995, Friedenskooperative 1996, Smillie 1996, Fischer and Tumler 2000:20, ICVA 2000), Zene Zenama in Sarajevo (see Kleck 2007b,), and Norwegian’s People’s Aid that set up a clinic in Zenica and supported another centre in Tuzla (Agger et al. 1999, ICVA 2000, Scotto 2002). Many of the centres sooner or later became local NGOs. Amica for example became ‘Priateljice’ at the end of the 1990s.

²⁶¹ The group MOST that grew out of the Belgrade Centre for Anti-War Action has already been mentioned. An international group has been Medact that assisted with trauma intervention programmes in Belgrade, and devised “caring for carers” inputs for staff at refugee centres in Serbia (Large n.d.:79).

While that study from 1999 concluded that the projects also contributed to the training of health professionals and the modernisation of mental health policy and practice in the countries concerned, other authors have raised doubts over what they see as the assumption of the 'universal relevance of Anglo-American psycho-social models', even suggesting that such intervention 'may hinder spontaneous recovery from traumatic situations' (Pupavac 2003, see also Belloni 2000).

7.4.4 Summary: Social and Psycho-social Work - Between Good Will and Professionalism

Under this peace-building category of social and psycho-social work quite different approaches and types of activities were collected. On the one side there have been the professional services NGOs offered in the fields of youth work, work with women, trauma etc. On the other side there has been – as was the case with humanitarian aid and reconstruction – much involvement by untrained international volunteers and activities by groups without much (if any) track record in the type of service they offered. This supports once more the thesis of the movement character of part of the international response to the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia. And it, of course, also poses serious questions regarding the overall impact of the various efforts on the people and the conflicts on the ground. The evaluations available tend to draw a mixed picture here, noting some success but also problems and shortcomings (compare for example the section above on psycho-social work for examples). I will return to these questions later in the overall conclusions to this chapter.

7.5 Economic Recovery

Economic recovery is a field in which states and international organisations like IMF and World Bank have played a larger role than civil society actors (see chapter 4).

The general driving motive in this area is that economic foundations are necessary to sustain longer-term peace, and that short-term recovery buys confidence in the peace process (see Woodward 2002:185).

Very few NGOs have had the financial means for large financial grants. Most NGOs in that field rather concentrated on funding projects of implementing partners, giving micro credits, conducting vocational training or giving material help to set up small business (like farming animals, tools etc).²⁶² To give some examples for illustration:

- The Church World Service would seek to involve beneficiaries in its work. Hence, for example, if approached by someone for a cow, they would ask that person to gather 15 people from their village who also needed a cow, and then go to market with them to buy cows (United Institute for Peace 2003).
- The Italian Associazione Sprofondo founded in 1995 a cooperative bank as an inter-ethnic project in Sarajevo (Banca del lavoro o gruppi di collaborazione) (Tullio and Vertucci 2002).
- Other examples for income-generating projects (knitting and sewing by women refugees, carpentry workshops) have already been mentioned in the context of the ‘social reconstruction’ and the therapeutic women’s centres.
- Vocational training has been another typical activity of civil society actors. Very often these trainings took place in a context of multi-ethnic cooperation, the organisers seeking to make sure that ‘former enemies’ attended them together, and thereby also contributing to reconciliation (see CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects 2006 for Kosovo).

Concerning the conflict-related ‘side effect’ of economic programmes, the CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects (2006) evaluated programmes in Kosovo according ²⁶² Trade Unions need to be mentioned as a separate civil society actor in the context of economic recovery. The International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, an umbrella organisation, started working in former Yugoslavia at beginning of 1990s when free trade unions were founded throughout Eastern Europe, seeking to support the fledgling market economy. After the war, they opened an office in Sarajevo that is responsible for all South East Europe. Their work consists of advising trade union confederations and implementing capacity building programmes, and they form a link between trade union movement and international institutions (Fischer 2007b).

to whether their work had any impact with regard to the interethnic violence that had erupted in 2004. They found that interethnic business relationships created with the help of international actors tended to be immune to the violence: However, they also remark critically that the relationships did not lead to the people involved taking action against the violence – the cooperation was limited to the strictly economic field.

7.6 Transitional Justice and Human Rights Documentation

Transitional justice (see chapter 4.3.1.6) has been a field of peace-building which was dominated by governmental actors (e.g. the creation of the International Criminal Court for the Former Yugoslavia), with NGOs in a more merely supporting role. Civil Society actors could be found mostly in the fields of human rights documentation and ‘dealing with the past’.

7.6.1 Fact-finding and Documentation of Abuses

Over the years, a large number of NGOs have been involved in human rights documentation, both groups for whom human rights reporting is their main mission, and groups that came across human rights violation in the course of their work and reported on them.²⁶³ Examples of the first would be Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International (Human Rights Watch n.d., 2000 and 2003). Amnesty was monitoring the human rights situation in Yugoslavia already long before 1991 (see Woodward 1995:182).²⁶⁴ During the wars, they also reported on systematic taking of hostages and their ill-treatment, and sexual violations of Muslim women as a weapon of war (Mercier 1995:111).²⁶⁵

²⁶³ Human rights investigation and reporting is a category of activities that do not easily fit under one of the three ‘grand strategies’ because most of the projects and missions dealing with human rights have two aspects: the establishment of longer-term ‘rule of law’, with the collection of facts for prosecution and reparation on the one hand, and the immediate and middle-term prevention of violations on the other hand. The line between monitoring and active protection is a thin one. The collection of data itself can play a protective role since it may deter perpetrators (see Benedek 2001:213 and Mahony 2006:3 and 91pp), though Benedek (2001:211) remarks that this may also lead to disappointments when people expect monitors to intervene but their mandate does not allow it.

²⁶⁴ Before 1991, they published reports on prisoners of conscience and political prisoners in Serbia, ill-treatment and torture in Kosovo, use of force by JNA and VRS forces for displacement of populations.

7.6.2 Dealing With the Past

Alongside human rights monitoring, ‘dealing with the past’ has probably been the field with most involvement by external civil society actors. One example would be the veterans’ project by the Centre for Nonviolent Action (CNA). The CNA could be considered one of the ‘embedded’ interveners in conflict – a mostly local organisation though initiated by an international group.²⁶⁶ In addition to their main focus - nonviolence training - in 2002 CNA started a project with war veterans under the title ‘Dealing with the Past’. Their motivation has been to offer an alternative approach to the issue that in the discourse in the countries of former Yugoslavia is heavily dominated by what happens at the ICTY in The Hague, and that sometimes leads to feelings of victimisation and nationalist sentiments rather than to increased willingness to face the past.

Their concrete objectives were building a pool of former combatants who would be constructively engaged in a process of self-critical public debate on the past, raising public awareness on the need to confront the past as a means of future violence prevention (Wils 2004). “How I found myself in war and how to reach sustainable peace” was the title given to 14 public forums held between 2002 and 2004 in Serbia, Bosnia-Herzegovina and Montenegro where war veterans – identified by the CND

²⁶⁵ See also Friedenskoooperative 1996, Chandler 1999:96, Zitzlaff 1999:50, Stovel 2000:31, Kruhonja 2002:253, Large n.d.:70.

Especially important have been the different local human rights organisations in the various countries, e.g. the local Amnesty International and Helsinki Committee for Human Rights groups, the Humanitarian Law Fund (Serbia), the Council for the Defence of Human Rights and Freedom (Kosovo), Forum for Human Rights (Macedonia), different member organisations of the Antiratne Kampanje Croatia, Documenta (Zagreb), Research and Documentation Center (Sarajevo) and many more (see Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung 1995, International Center for Transitional Justice 2008c).

²⁶⁶ The CNA was initiated in 1997 by a Serbian nonviolence trainer who had come as a conscientious objector to Germany and worked with the German nonviolence training centre Kurve Wustrow. He went in 1997 to Sarajevo in a pilot project for the Civil Peace Service scheme to set up what was first a project office of Kurve Wustrow. Very soon the CNA became an independent NGO with offices in Sarajevo and Belgrade, supported by the Kurve Wustrow under the Civil Peace Service scheme, and by the Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management which has been accompanying the project since its beginnings with participatory evaluations.

through their training work – were invited to speak. Most of the forums went well though there have occasionally also been interruptions by veterans' organisations.

7.6.3 Summary: Transitional Justice and Human Rights Monitoring - An Important Task for Both Civil Society and Governmental Actors

This field of activity perhaps more than some others requires the close cooperation of state and non-state actors. As was shown in chapter 4 and here in section 7.6, probably the main activities in this field come from the side of state actors. But civil society actors, engaged in human rights documentation and in helping to find alternative avenues towards dealing with the past, play an important subsidiary role. In many cases their expertise on the ground is essential because official governmental monitoring and fact-finding missions are usually either short-term or not as familiar with the situation as NGOs which maintain a presence on the ground for a much longer period. And while 'dealing with the past' through unofficial channels is certainly not well developed in the area of former Yugoslavia (unlike some other countries, see Buckley-Zistel 2005), projects like the one by CNA show that there is some space for such approaches.

7.7 State-building, Democratisation and Civil Society Support

Rebuilding public institutions, state-building, democratisation and civil society support is a vast category of many different approaches and activities. It is an area where both state and civil society actors can be found. In the following sections I will look at rebuilding of public institutions, support for political parties and elections, media support, support of local NGOs and - a topic closely related to the others but still different - 'solidarity work' with groups and movements in the former Yugoslavia.

7.7.1 Rebuilding Public Institutions

I use the term ‘public institutions’ as a broad category including all the infrastructure of a state – from the security sector to tax and customs system to schools and kindergartens.

Apart from their involvement in human rights training,²⁶⁷ civil society actors figure comparatively little in security sector reform with the exception that some NGOs play a role in police training.²⁶⁸

As to civilian institutions, schools have attracted particular interest from international civil society. To illustrate this point with just one example, taken from the work of the Catholic Relief Services (CRS), a large US organisation with multiple programmes reaching from material aid to the support of reconciliation: In Macedonia where CRS have been active since 1993, their activities include helping to establish a national Parent-Teacher Association (PTA). Their goal was to use the common concern of school education to bring the different ethnic communities together. In a three-year programme starting in 1995-96 financed by a US$ 1,2 million USAID grant, they helped to set up local Parent-Teacher-Associations as well as a national steering committee. Local communities were responsible for raising funds and obtaining supplies and local services (for example to do repairs in schools) to match CRS’s contributions. CRS in addition conducted regional awareness training workshops. Through the PTAs, the project succeeded in fostering inter-ethnic cooperation, increased the participation of women, and provided safe

²⁶⁷ Human rights counselling and training has been an almost standard activity in post-war situations all over the area, and conducted by both state actors (OSCE for example) and NGOs.

²⁶⁸ There have been NGOs involved in police training (for example SIPRI and the Constitutional and Legal Policy Institute in Kosovo, see CORE 2002:55). One large NGO focusing on legal reform has been the American Bar Association (ABA). ABA claims to be the largest voluntary professional organisation in the world with more than 400,000 members, aiming “to be the national representative of the legal profession, serving the public and the profession by promoting justice, professional excellence and respect for the law” (American Bar Association 2008). After the end of the war in Bosnia, they started an international project, the Central European Law Initiative (CELI). Its objective was to advance the rule of law in the world by supporting the legal reform process in Central Europe and the former Soviet countries. In Bosnia CELI first aimed to help to reintegrate the legal systems of the Federation and the Serbian Republic but that was impossible at that time. By 2002 ABA had held 42 training workshops and completed 23 legal assessments on topics ranging from foreign investment to the juridical organisation (Riskin 1999, CORE 2002:55, King, Dorn and Hodes 2002:23pp).

Another example would be the seconding of a staff person from the Bradford Department of Peace Studies to the Vushtriu Police Academy in Kosovo after 1999 (verbal information by Howard Clark).

space for community problem solving. Leatherman (1999) writes that for the success of the project it was important that CRS was already known and trusted through its humanitarian assistance that gave it an entry point to the different communities. Other helpful factors were positive media coverage, the high esteem in which US citizens were held in Macedonia (the project staff included US citizens), and the ‘demonstration effect’ of the success of the first associations (see Leatherman 1999, Leatherman et al. 1999:149,166 and 173, Miall 1999, Ackermann 2000:149).²⁶⁹

7.7.2 Political Parties and Democratic Elections

Support for ‘democratic’ political parties and elections are a field in which both state and non-state actors have been working. In the protectorates, it has fallen to the international administration to design a (new) electoral system, and implement or later oversee the conduct of elections. In independent countries state actors were involved with advice and monitoring (see the work of the OSCE described in chapter 4). In both scenarios, large amounts of money have been channelled over the years to what were considered oppositional or democratic parties, sometimes directly, sometimes through INGOs (among them so-called ‘quasi-NGOs’ because of their strong link to governmental institutions). Otherwise the main role of international civil society organisations (meaning here mostly NGOs, party foundations and political parties themselves) in this field has been to advise state bodies, educate voters, and monitor elections (see also Carothers 1999:123pp, Bose 2002:218pp).²⁷⁰

²⁶⁹ Examples for other activities related to schools include:

- The German group Schueler Helfen Leben (Pupils Help to Live) worked in Bosnia-Herzegovina on models for self-representation of school pupils, so-called student councils. (Fischer and Tumler 2000:36p, Emrich and Rickerts 2007).
- Contacts made between schools or individual classes in other countries and schools in the area of former Yugoslavia. Sometimes this took the form of ‘twinning’. So for example promoted the Italian Berretti Bianchi school partnerships between Aleksinac (Serbia) and Seravezza (Italy) after the war of 1999 (l’Abate 2002b, Tullio and Vertucci 2002).
- Providing materials and training methods of peace education has been another activity, for example Beati i costruttori di pace in Kosovo after 1999 (see l’Abate 2002b) and United Methodist Committee on Relief in Bosnia (see Demichelis 1998, Riskin 1999).
- The German group Susanna Lipovac/ Kinderberg e.V. set up in the late 1990s an educational web domain on peace education for all Yugoslavia (Fischer and Tumler 2000:34).

²⁷⁰ In Germany, the political foundations attached to the major political parties have been a major channel of support.. They have all been active in the area of former Yugoslavia, supporting oppositional parties (mostly also independent media and local NGOs) with money, networking and

7.7.3 Media Support

The support for independent media began right with the conflicts in 1991, with both civil society and state actors such as the EU Commission and OSCE heavily involved in it.

The mass media in all countries of former Yugoslavia (with the possible exception of Slovenia) have traditionally been close to those who ruled. When Yugoslavia fell apart and a wave of nationalism accompanied the armed confrontations, these media fuelled the tension through what can be termed 'hate speech' - justifying or even inciting violence against 'the enemy' who was often portrayed in long-thought-dead stereotypes from World War II. But in all countries there have also been both print and electronic media, often founded between 1989 and 1991, that tried to send out another message, promoting pluralistic values, criticizing their own government and its politics.²⁷¹

Rhodes (2007) who conducted a meta-evaluation of ten years of media support in the region found different objectives for media support, falling in two main categories, namely changing society and media-specific goals. Simplifying his findings and adding on from other sources, I would like to distinguish three main goals here:

- The first was through the support of media that were considered as 'oppositional' or 'democratic' to contribute to changing the society and influencing the politics in the target country. "Media support is – intrinsically – among the most politicized forms of foreign aid", Rhodes states correctly (2007:16). This goal has motivated the media support throughout the 1990s especially in FR Yugoslavia, Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina.
- The second goal, overtly pursued in Bosnia and Kosovo after the wars, but also seminars (see minutes of the (Ex-)Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis, Handrich 1999, ICVA 2000, Heinrich-Boell-Stiftung 2001b).

From the side of the US, it has mainly been USAID, a fully state-financed agency that was active in this field with own projects and by providing funds to other US organisations like the National Democratic Institute (NDI). NDI is a party foundation of the Democratic Party, and like its Republican counterpart, the International Republican Institute (IRI), NDI has been very active since about 1996/97 in Bosnia-Herzegovina, FR Yugoslavia and other countries of the former Yugoslavia with multiple programmes designed as democracy aid (see Gagnon 1998b and 2002:215pp).

²⁷¹ Among them were Radio B92 and newspaper Vreme in FR Yugoslavia, Radio 101 and the papers Feral Tribune and Arkzin in Croatia, Monitor and Radio Antenna in Montenegro, Koha Ditore and Zeri in Kosovo, and Dani and Oslobodjenje in Bosnia-Herzegovina (see Rhodes 2007:20).

in Macedonia after the 2001 Ohrid agreement, was to build media that would be independent and 'objective' and that would "contribute to peace by providing objective (non-inflammatory) information and providing open debate on important peace issues" (CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects 2006:13). In addition, the international actors sometimes wanted to support media with multi-ethnic staff and programme as an element of the multi-ethnic society that they wanted to encourage.

- The third set of goals covered professional standards, accountability and self-regulation, etc, especially as a theme of media support in the protectorates.

The main activities of media support from the side of civil society have been the following:²⁷²

- Financial support and the donation of equipment;²⁷³
- Training for journalists;
- Advising on media laws and regulatory frameworks;
- Networking between media and journalists from different countries, and with international networks;²⁷⁴
- Creation of local media or media programs by international actors or under their influence: This activity has been more characteristic of state actors (see chapter

²⁷² Rhodes describes two other types of activities, mostly to be found in state actor interventions: reform of legal and regulatory frameworks and support for media institutions. See also Topic (2007:157pp) for that type of work in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

²⁷³ One of the major - if not the major - civil society supporter of such media has been the Open Society Institute (OSI). It was founded in 1993 by the American-Hungarian multimillionaire and philanthropist George Soros to support his already existing work of supporting democratic transition in the countries of Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union (Open Society Institute 2008). The Open Society Institute set up regional offices in most of the countries of former Yugoslavia, mostly registering as local NGOs under the name of Open Society Fund. Their general objective has been to build a strong and diverse civil society. To that purpose, among other activities (for example furthering human rights and rule of law) financial support to local NGOs and existing independent media was given, and training for journalists offered (Bekkering 1997, Clark 2000:110, Lund 2000c:194, ICVA 2000, Stovel 2000:30, Fond Otvoreno Drustvo Bosne I Hercegovine 2001, Sali-Terzic 2001, Large n.d.:142).

²⁷⁴ To give one example: in 1992 the European Citizens' Forum and the international radio network FERL (European Federation of Free Radios) invited in 1992 journalists to Rijeka for a conference on free media. The outcome was the founding of an alternative information network of journalists (Alternativna Informativna Mreza - AIM) from the area and support for the regional Croatian-Italian radio Rijeka-Fiume (Alpe Adria 1993). AIM has throughout the period under study been an important actor in independent and critical reporting.

4), but there are also civil society organizations using this instrument.²⁷⁵

- Support for media institutions (media centres, journalist associations or unions etc.)

As to the outcomes of media support in general, Rhodes found that the impact of assistance to media has been substantial, as demonstrated by increased respect for human rights, existence of independent media, free flow of information, improved professional standards among others (2007:8), and was an effective way to promote pluralism (2007:34). Material support in particular he judges as very relevant and efficient, especially when donors had a local presence and the financial means for substantial support (Rhodes 2007:19pp). It can be assumed that without that international support most independent media would not have made it through the 1990s. Though some media eventually closed down (like Arkzin or Nasa Borba), the journalists trained by working for them now often have important roles in the new media or in political life. He found however a lack of donor coordination which led to larger numbers of new 'independent' media competing for international support. The funding available led to a plethora of new media founded because there was money of which many were not able to survive (2007:20).

7.7.4 Support of Local NGOs

Besides media support, the support of local NGOs is a field with intense activities of civil society actors in the peace-building subcategory of state-building, democratization and civil society.

The support of local groups that were founded either before 1991 or later (but independently of the interventions by external parties) needs to be distinguished from that of new local NGOs founded solely for the purpose of becoming implementing partners for a programme or project devised by the international organisation.²⁷⁶ However, there are no very firm boundaries between the two categories since NGOs mushroomed all over the area in the 1990s, and many that started out as an international initiative became stable locally-led groups (for example the mentioned Centre for Nonviolent Action in Sarajevo and the Open Society Fund). This section will deal with support to those groups and movements – mostly anti-war, feminist, human rights groups - that were clearly under local leadership and pursued a wider agenda than just running one particular programme or project funded from abroad.²⁷⁷ General support for the groups took mostly the form of financial aid, sending international volunteers to work with them, networking and training. The first three instruments are dealt with in this section. Training for NGOs will be discussed in the next section on ‘peace and dialogue’ because it is very difficult to separate them from trainings for a wider circle of participants.²⁷⁸

²⁷⁵ Search for Common Ground produced and broadcast in 1994 a series of interactive radio programmes to promote peace and reconciliation in Bosnia-Herzegovina (Riskin 1999, Search for Common Ground n.d.). And in 1992-93, Reporters sans Frontières and the French organisation Droits de Parole ran a radio station from a ship in international waters at the Dalmatian coast, seeking to broadcast unbiased information to Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina. But this project had to stop when the International Telecommunications Union forbade its emissions (Mercier 1995:xvi, 143).

²⁷⁶ The latter happened either right from the beginning of a project or, more usually, in the context of ‘handing over the project into local hands’ which is a standard international strategy to secure sustainability,

²⁷⁷ Before 1991, with the exception of Slovenia, Yugoslav civil society was relatively weak, although there were certain traditional organisations like unions and humanitarian groups, as well as intellectual circles in the large university towns. This picture changed in 1990-91 with the liberalisation in most republics and the first multi-party elections (see chapter 3). When the danger of war became obvious, and especially after the violence in Slovenia in July 1991, there was a short-lived peace movement in summer 1991 with demonstrations in larger towns, issuing peace appeals and founding new groups. But with the rapid escalation in Croatia that autumn the new and old groups found themselves on different sides of military as well as mental frontlines.

From 1991 on, civil society in all (soon: former) Yugoslav republics has had five main constituents: independent media, anti-war groups (they preferred that term to ‘peace’), women and feminist groups, human rights groups, and organisations engaging in humanitarian work. Sometimes a single group would include elements of those, as Antiratne Kampanje (Croatia), the Centre for Antiwar Action in Belgrade and Women in Black (Belgrade).

²⁷⁸ There were also other kinds of services intended to help local NGOs, from opening a library/info point (ICVA 2000), the provision of legal advice, providing meeting space (a Japanese group financed a meeting house close to Sarajevo for the youth network Nesto Vise (Fischer and Tumler 2000:41), vehicles and driving, making print materials for local groups available, printing articles written by local groups, offering translation services, and raising their international reputation by giving awards to local activists (for example in 1997 the Norwegian Endowment for Freedom awarded its Andrey Sakharov Preis to Vesna Pestic, the founder of the Centre for Antiwar Action in Belgrade and president of the smallest of the three parties that made up the Zajedno coalition (see Centar za antiratnu akciju ed. 1997).

7.7.4.1 Financial and Material Aid to Anti-War, Women's and Human Rights Groups

Groups from the Western peace movement in 1991-92 quickly identified partners in the former Yugoslav countries, and almost all of them at one time or the other collected donations for their work, and often delivered it in person. The mentioned Komitee fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie alone in 1991 donated 120,000 DM (about 60,000 €) to more than a dozen peace groups and media. Other groups donated computers, fax machines, books and the like, or helped to translate international books into the local languages (see Pax Christi Nederland 1995, Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1996, Vack 1996a and 1996b).

Aid came also from larger and professional NGOs and foundations. For example, in 1999 the Heinrich-Boell-Foundation, a foundation of the German Green party that was active on the conflicts since 1992, opened a regional office in Sarajevo. By 2001 they were supporting 37 projects, mostly run by local NGOs. Among them were the Women in Black and Women Infoteka, two well-known women's organisations in the area (Heinrich-Boell-Stiftung 2001b).²⁷⁹

:

7.7.4.2 Sending International Volunteers

Many organisations sent volunteers to work with local NGOs, and in addition there were also a number of unattached internationals finding their way to the offices of these groups, and sometimes staying for months if not years.²⁸⁰ In Europe and North America there were a number of pre-existing organisations seeking to work for peace and reconciliation through offering volunteer work and international exchange, most of them Christian-based volunteer peace services.²⁸¹ In the context of the wars in former Yugoslavia, the renewed interest in that type of work led to a new wave of volunteer services, under the umbrella term of ‘civil peace services’, joining these older agencies. Already mentioned in this study were Austrian Peace Services and the German Civil Peace Service. These new services were much more strongly focussing on ‘peace’ which does not mean that they excluded humanitarian aid or social services, but rather that they put this kind of work into the explicit framework of peace-building.²⁸²

²⁷⁹ Larger NGOs and foundations served as intermediaries or funding conduits to international state donors that often gave them money than to the local group directly, mostly for administrative reasons. So Sweden, for example, financed all its work with NGOs in the region through Swedish NGOs (see Duffield 1996). Other countries gave grants directly, for example Canada, France and Netherlands (see Smillie 1996).

²⁸⁰ The difference to projects like Balkan Peace Team (see chapter 6), or later the work of the German Civil Peace Service is that these volunteers worked as supporters of the local groups, not as non-partisan externals. In that they can much more be compared with solidarity work international brigades did in Latin America in the 1980s than with the professional peace-building undertaken by the large international NGOs in the area.

Almost all anti-war and human rights groups in the area had at least one international volunteer in their office since 1991 or 1992. These volunteers helped with a variety of tasks, not least important of which were maintaining international links and translating materials.

Pete Haemmerle, one of the key people in Austrian Peace Services (OEFD) as well as the Balkan Peace Team, wrote in two assessments of the work of the OEFD that the work of peace services is effective in peace-building at the middle and grassroots level of society. In some cases they were able to prevent violence although peace services of course could not stop wars. But they could build bridges, protect human rights and help to overcome feelings of hopelessness (Haemmerle 1998 and 2001).

7.7.4.3 Networking and Linking

Networking was a function played by many internationals who worked closely with local groups. There were at least four directions for such networking:

- Between local groups and the local authorities: A group that consistently named linking as an important function of its work was the Balkan Peace Team (see Schweitzer and Clark 2002:30, Mueller 2004). Internationals often found it easier to access to such authorities. When BPT volunteers accompanied local activists in Croatia, they were met immediately by senior police or judges (Young 1998).

²⁸¹ Besides supporting local NGOs, many of them worked in refugee camps, in youth centres or social reconstruction projects (see above).

²⁸² There is today a European Network Civil Peace Service (EN.CPS) meeting once a year for exchange of information and discussion of various topics, e.g. training standards. See European Network Civil Peace Services (n.d.).

- Between local groups and the ‘international community’ working in the country, be it state or INGOs: For example, the main mandate of the International Council of Voluntary Agencies (ICVA) in Bosnia-Herzegovina was to foster communication and cooperation among the NGOs and to facilitate a coherent NGO interface with the representation of common issues to IFOR, OHR, UNHCR, OSCE, World Bank and other multinational institutions, governments, cantonal and municipal governments (quoted in Smillie 1996:49).

ICVA supported local NGOs through a variety of means: networking, exchange of information, training, advocacy, arranging meetings for local NGOs in its office, helping international organisations to identify candidates for training abroad, running a library and information centre, publishing a bulletin NGO News, being an intermediary for the EU PHARE programme, etc. Among others it initiated the Sarajevo NGO Council, the Tuzla NGO Reference Group and the Banja Luka Local NGO Forum (see Stubbs 1996b, Bekkering 1997, ICVA 2000).

- Between groups in ‘enemy territory’ in times when travel or contact was impossible, or groups shy to seek direct contact fearing a bad reception: When in late 1991 contact between Croatia and Serbia was almost fully interrupted, internationals were still able to travel from one country to the other, and pass messages, take letters or help to organise meetings in third countries (see Schweitzer 1991 and 1992).²⁸³
- Between local groups and international civil society: Many international networks made contact with groups in former Yugoslavia, or were approached by local groups who had heard of them. Foremost of them were various women and peace networks like Women in Black, IPPNW, International Women Network for Peace, International Fellowship of Reconciliation, War Resisters’

²⁸³ One special project in this context was the creation of an e-mail network throughout the former Yugoslavia in 1992-93, at a time when e-mail was a new technology with which most people were unfamiliar. An activist from the German Federation for Social Defence together with some other peace groups in Europe (Tilburg za mir, Group for a Switzerland Without an Army), and - later financed partly by the Soros Foundation - helped to set up the ZAMIR network with mailboxes in Ljubljana, Zagreb, Belgrade, and from 1994 on also in Sarajevo, linking 150 groups and individuals with each other (Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung 1992, n.d.-a, n.d.-c, Schweitzer 1994:57, Large n.d.:142, Tilburg za Mir n.d.).

Before ZAMIR was operational, a fax bridge set up with the help of activists in Vienna served the same purpose (Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1994), as did the office of War Resisters’ International (see the archives of the WRI website, www.wri-irg.org).

International and the International Helsinki Federation for Human Rights (see IPPNW 1993, War Resisters' International 1994, Women in Black 1994c, Ackermann 2000:149, Jovanic 2001, Kruhonja 2002:253).²⁸⁴

Another activity in this context was to invite representatives of local groups, media, parties and intellectuals to conferences, speaking events and the like (see Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1996, National Peace Council, Tullio and Vertucci 2002).

- Between local groups from different conflict areas: At least two different international groups have facilitated contact of activists from former Yugoslavia, especially Kosovo, with Northern Ireland, obviously feeling that the two conflict regions had things in common: Under the name of KONI a body of Pax Christi Germany (Bistumsstelle Rottenburg-Stuttgart) together with the Forum Civil Peace Service developed since 2000 a dialogue programme between Serbian, Albanian and Slavic Muslims from four towns in Kosovo with North Irish 'Cross-community workers' (Pax Christi et al. 2000, Forum Ziviler Friedensdienst 2002).²⁸⁵ Several years earlier, in 1995, the British trainers' network Committee for Conflict Transformation Support (CCTS) organised a study trip to Northern Ireland for activists from Bosnia, Croatia and Serbia.

The networking function has rarely been highlighted when international civil society groups describe their activities. At best, it is mentioned as one function among several. I think that this underestimates the importance of this role. The linking and networking is a function of vital importance for civil society because it leads to a discourse and transfer of experiences and knowledge. It is a method of empowerment because local and international groups are finding themselves as equal partners in international networks rather than in a relationship of donor and recipient. And it builds bridges when direct contacts are difficult because either one side does not take the other seriously (often the case when local NGOs have to deal with international organisations or local authorities), or because people do not dare to make direct contact for fear of being rejected (such was the case, at least early on, with anti-war groups caught up on different sides of the war). On general terms however, the observation by Mendelson (2002) who researched NGO support in different countries of Eastern Europe and Eurasia needs to be taken seriously that intense involvement in international networks also can distract local groups from their own issues, although I have found little evidence of this problem in the area under study.

²⁸⁴ There were also professional organisations like a German Umbrella of 'democratic scientists' (Bund der demokratischen WissenschaftlerInnen –BDWi) who started cooperation with the Serbian initiative 'Responsibility for the Future' (Jovanovic 2001), and cooperation between international journalists (see below).

²⁸⁵ The Forum Civil Peace Service (CPS) is a German umbrella organisation that was founded in 1996 to promote a peace service of professional 'peace experts', comparable to development services. Its first activities were trainings for such 'experts'. Pax Christi Germany which had been sending volunteers to the former Yugoslavia since 1992, was one of the organisations setting up pilot projects for the civil peace service. From 1999 on, there was then state funding for the CPS, and then the Forum CPS administered projects for some of its member organisations as well as sending own staff to the field. Pax Christi was the initiator of projects in Zenica and Banja Luka in Bosnia, and Benkovac in Croatia (see Bauer and Muller 1996, Pax Christi International 1996b, Ruessmann 1999b, Ruessmann 1999c, ICVA 2000, Meyer 2000, Forum Ziviler Friedensdienst 2002, Schiel 2002, Kukla 2003, Pax Christi 2003, Forum Ziviler Friedensdienst n.d.-b).

7.7.5 Solidarity Work

Solidarity work is of course a form of support for local groups. The reason why it has been made a section of its own is that unlike the general support described before it focussed on particular issues whose goals are shared by the international interveners—issues like the right to refuse to military service, or a struggle for independence or regime change.

7.7.5.1 Support for Those Avoiding Military Service

Support for conscientious objectors, deserters and draft evaders were an issue for international antimilitarist and pacifist groups. There were an estimated 300,000 of such men, the majority of them probably from the FR Yugoslavia, followed by Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina (Friedrich 1995).²⁸⁶ Partly this support took the form of protest and advocacy in third countries where governments and the EU were lobbied to grant them asylum (see chapter 8). In the area of the former Yugoslavia, concrete support to hide or flee the countries was given.

²⁸⁶ There were some women volunteers in some of the armies but no draft or other pressure on women to join the military in the countries in question.

War Resisters' International (WRI) was the international umbrella organisation whose members played a crucial role in this.²⁸⁷ It had contact with a youth group in Slovenia since the late 1970s, supporting them in the 1980s in their struggle for recognition of the right of conscientious objection. When the wars then began, WRI and its network of member organisations got involved in multiple activities of support and solidarity, ranging from training through to support of conscientious objectors and draft evaders. Local groups were the first contact of those seeking to escape or avoid military service, for example Women in Black in Belgrade or the Antiwar Campaign in Croatia. Partner organisations from abroad such as the Hungarian peace and human rights organisation Alba Koer helped them to cross the border to third countries and received them there, or sent them on to other countries. A deserters' network linked to WRI was crucial in coordinating these international efforts that often had an element of civil disobedience since the European countries were hesitant to recognise avoidance of military service as a reason for asylum.²⁸⁸

The high number of those who avoided military service undoubtedly had an impact on the conflicts. It played an important role very early on during the violent conflict in Slovenia and then the war in Croatia because many men then still serving in the Yugoslav People's Army (JNA) left for patriotic reasons, often joining the newly formed armies of the secessionist republics, but seriously damaging the ability of the JNA to wage effective warfare in summer 1991. Later many from FR Yugoslavia and Croatia sought to escape military service, especially if that meant being sent to Bosnia-Herzegovina – something that both countries did though officially always denying the fact. Friedrich, one of the coordinators of the International Deserters' Network, thinks that “even if the mass desertion in Yugoslavia was not the cause for achieving a cease-fire agreement, it certainly contributed to a questioning of the ability to continue the war” (Friedrich 1996: 188).

²⁸⁷ WRI was founded after World War I of pacifist groups united around the issue of refusing military service.

²⁸⁸ The deserters' network was founded in 1993 and had in 1996 member groups in 13 European countries, combining concrete support of deserters with advocacy work for the right of asylum. See War Resisters' International 1994 and 1998a, Friedrich 1995, Friedrich 1996.

7.7.5.2 Solidarity with Kosovo – the Activities in Kosovo

The nonviolent character of the resistance movement in Kosovo appealed to a number of groups and organizations interested in and committed to nonviolent resistance themselves.²⁸⁹ Once more, War Resisters' International was one focus, another was certain groups in particular from the French and Italian language area.²⁹⁰ This work had two sides: advocacy and public information work abroad that will be described in the next chapter, and concrete activities with the Kosovar organisations in Kosovo.

As an example of work in Kosovo I would like to sketch the work of the Campagna per una soluzione nonviolenta del problema del Kossovo (Campaign for a Nonviolent Solution of the Problem of Kosovo). It was a coordination of different Italian NGOs that was initiated in 1992 by Albert l'Abate, a well-known nonviolent researcher-activist from the University of Florence (see Troebst 1998:97pp, l'Abate 1997:7-8, 22 and 59pp, Marcon 2000:144, l'Abate 2002-b).²⁹¹ After two years of publicity work, organising delegations to Belgrade and Kosovo, and other work more focussed on the international and Italian public, in 1995 they started trying to establish a permanent presence in Prishtina under the name of a 'Peace Embassy'. Since the FR Yugoslavia and especially Kosovo were difficult to access for foreigners planning to stay for any length of time (the first volunteer sent there in 1995 had to leave after three months), they only succeeded in having one or two permanent staff there from August 1997 until 1998. The objectives of the Peace Embassy were human rights monitoring, creating a meeting place for people of different nations, cultures, political orientations and religions, facilitating intercultural relations, finding common denominators between Albanians and Serbs; supporting networking between Albanians and the pacifist groups in Serbia and ²⁸⁹ It was nonviolent until in 1997/98 the armed Kosovo Liberation Army took over the de-facto leadership of the movement, and started to determine its strategies.

²⁹⁰ Mouvement pour une alternative non-violente, Centre Martin Luther King in Switzerland, Helsinki Citizens Assembly Geneva, the Collectif du jumelage Geneva-Prishtina and the Campagna Kossovo in Italy were the main groups identified in the survey.

²⁹¹ The organisations coordinating the Campagna were MIR (Fellowship of Reconciliation Italy), Pax Christi, Beati i Costruttori di Pace, Agimi-Caritas di Otranto, and it was also supported by the Movimento Nonviolento, the Segretaria Nazionale per la Difesa Popolare Nonviolenta and a regional government (Regione Val d'Aosta).

supporting twinning of Italian and Kosovar schools and organisations (l'Abate 2002b).²⁹²

It is difficult to assess what if any role the international support by these rather small and radical nonviolent groups played for the resistance in Kosovo. Larger NGOs other than some humanitarian (Caritas, working with the organisation Mother Theresa) were rare in Kosovo. The Open Society Fund supported some media, but otherwise there was no significant financial or other political support of the movement⁴. The Kosovo-Albanian resistance was mostly financed by the Albanian diaspora (see Clark 2000). The nonviolent strategy as represented by President Rugova and Shkelzen Maliqi (Maliqi, 1995, n.d.-a, and -b) was developed without international counselling or training. War Resisters' International twice was approached (in 1992-93 and 1998) for a training in nonviolent action but in the end the plans fell through because each time the local side for security reasons cancelled the preparations (see War Resisters' International 1994 and 2002). Thus, on the whole, it may be concluded that the solidarity work did not play an essential role for the struggle in Kosovo other than helping them with propagating their objectives abroad (see chapter 8).²⁹³

7.7.5.3 Overthrowing the Yugoslav Government

In contrast, the overthrow of the Milosevic regime in October 2000 by a nonviolent mass movement led by the students' movement Otpor is a success story of nonviolent resistance, though rather contested in regard to the role played by ²⁹² Their work as that of the other groups involved in Kosovo solidarity was slowed down in the 1998 events and the fact that the struggle had become a violent one, and then fully interrupted by the NATO war against FR Yugoslavia. But after that war they mostly picked up the contacts. The Mouvement pour une alternative non-violente (which was also a member organisation of Balkan Peace Team) in 2001 began a Civil Peace Service project in Mitrovica, and the Campagna opened a 'Centre for Friendship Between the People', and continued with different dialogue activities (between ethnic groups, youth, religious leaders and schools).

²⁹³ A 'counterfactual' question is worth addressing: what if there had been more international engagement by civil society, perhaps including setting up a large international presence in Kosovo for nonviolent peace-keeping, as urged by the US organisation Peaceworkers in 1998 (see chapter 6.3.2). Perhaps at an earlier stage such support could have prevented the movement from turning violent and still helped it to achieve its goals. If, as I believe, there were real chances missed, international civil society shares the burden of responsibility for the events that eventually led to the NATO war of 1999.

international support.²⁹⁴ In August 2000, as national elections approached, Otpor launched an anti-Milosevic campaign with the slogan 'he is finished'. On the election day, the 24 September, more than 30,000 volunteers monitored some 10,000 polling stations. The strategy Otpor pursued was to call for massive participation in the elections, and – assuming that it would be likely that Milosevic would try to rig the results – collect proof for any irregularities and use them for public protest (Nenadic and Belcevic 2006:15). Immediately after the election, the opposition parties declared their candidate Vojislav Kostunica as victor, while Milosevic claimed that neither had the majority. In response, the opposition called for a general strike that was full in force after a few days. On 5 October, hundred thousands of protesters assembled on the streets of Belgrade, storming the parliament and state-run television and radio stations, mostly without using violence. On October 6 Milosevic acknowledged defeat.

The successful overthrow of the Milosevic regime is probably the clearest example of the interplay between three sides: a vibrant local protest movement, democratisation policies by international governments and large INGOs close to these governments, and international nonviolent grassroots movements as the third component.

There had been protest against the Milosevic regime throughout the 1990s, mostly led by oppositional parties and students. Independent media like Radio B92 and anti-war and feminist groups like the Centre for Antiwar Action and Women in Black received support by the international civil society throughout the 1990s. They received financial aid, had volunteers working with them and were closely linked to different international networks. There have also been trainings that discussed nonviolent action strategies throughout the 1990s (see Bund fuer Soziale ²⁹⁴ Otpor (meaning 'resistance') was founded in autumn 1998 by a small group of students who had been active in the previous protests of winter 1996-97 (see 3.4). The protests began in September 1999 with rallies in 20 cities, asking Milosevic to resign. The police reacted with violence but the protests continued, though the numbers dwindled for some time as the political opposition started to fragment once more. However, between November 1999 and early 2000, Otpor developed a national-wide but decentralised organisation trying to avoid exposing leaders which would have made repression easier. In May 2000, 18 political parties united to form a new coalition calling itself Democratic Opposition of Serbia (DOS).

The description of the overthrow of Milosevic and Otpor's role in it is based on Vasovic 2000, Popovic 2001, Nenadic and Belcevic 2006, Centre for Applied NonViolent Action & Strategies 2008a and 2008b, Zunes 2008.

Verteidigung 1993, Large n.d.:100). But for most of the time this support was given mostly by small international NGOs being part of the peace movements of their respective countries who collected donations among their membership and supporters. Only a few large organisations with ample financial resources, like the Soros Foundation (see above), were engaged in this field. This situation changed after the NATO war, due to Western governments' new interest in supporting regime change in Belgrade making resources available in quantities previously unimagined.²⁹⁵ For 'democracy aid', the USA alone spent US$10 million in 1999 and US$31 million in 2000, money that was spent on sponsoring meetings and trainings or went mostly to oppositional parties and municipalities, NGOs and media (Carothers 2001:3). A proportion of that money was channelled through a small number of US QUANGOs, the National Endowment for Democracy, the already mentioned National Democratic Institute (NDI), and the International Republican Institute (IRI) being the three most important ones. Carothers (2001) estimates that the level of EU aid in these two years was similar, also about US$40 million. Besides money, the material support included office equipment, and also protest materials (IRI paid for 2,5 million 'he is finished'-stickers, t-shirts and sprays).

The second element of international support for Otpor consisted of conferences, trainings and workshops.²⁹⁶ Some commentators attribute these events with a pivotal role in the overthrow of Milosevic. In July 1999, the EastWest Institute (EWI) organised a conference in Bratislava, right after the end of the Yugoslavia-Kosovo war, with the title "The Future of the FR Yugoslavia in the context of post war reconstruction" (see Mathews 2001).²⁹⁷ Participants included people from the political opposition, trade unions, NGOs and media, as well as key figures from the ²⁹⁵ The relationship between the FR Yugoslavia and the Western world had improved after the Dayton Agreement. The sanctions were mostly abolished, and Milosevic was seen by many as a guarantee for stability in the region. Only after the NATO war of 1999 this changed, and EU and USA agreed that it was time for a regime change in Serbia /FR Yugoslavia, combining economic sanctions, diplomatic isolation including the indictment of Milosevic by ICTY, and democracy aid (see Carothers 2001 and chapter 4 of this study).

²⁹⁶ For the following sections on material aid and trainings, see Gagnon 1998b, Cohen 2000, Dobbs 2000, Mathews 2001, Thompson 2001, Mascolo 2005, Paulson 2005, Nenadic and Belcevic 2006, Zunes 2008:

²⁹⁷ The EastWest-Institute is a think tank founded in 1980, involving a number of elder statesmen (among them George W. Bush Sr. and Helmut Kohl), and , with offices today in USA, Belgium and Russia. It set up a task force working on FR Yugoslavia, engaging both in international advocacy work and concrete work with actors on the ground.

EU, Council of Europe and OSCE. The subject of the discussion was how to achieve a 'free and democratic' society.²⁹⁸ EWI then organised a series of meetings between September 1999 and February 2000 that brought the Community for Change into contacts with international actors like the Council of Europe, and the Community held meetings in Belgrade which soon became an important forum for opposition groups. In July 2000 a new conference in Bratislava decided to work on common visions for the elections. Soon after the new party 'DOS' was formed and Kostunica nominated as presidential candidate.²⁹⁹

From 31 March 2000 to 3 April, again in Budapest, IRI held a training for 20 or 30 Otpor activists. As trainer they had Robert Helvey, a close colleague of Gene Sharp at the Albert Einstein Institution, a NGO that since 1983 had been "dedicated to advancing the study and use of strategic nonviolent action in conflicts throughout the world", having worked with resistance and pro-democracy groups in many countries of the world (Albert Einstein Institution 2008).³⁰⁰ Helvey presented a toolbox of methods and strategies for nonviolent revolution that obviously was very influential (the Otpor successor CANVAS is still relying heavily on this methodology as can be seen by their website).

In summer 2000 IRI then organised trainings for election observers in Szeged, on the Hungary-Yugoslav border. They trained about 400 monitors who went back and trained another 15,000 (other sources speak of 20,000).

These – the money and the trainings – were the main international support that the movement against Milosevic received. For its part, Otpor tried to keep it secret at the time, fearing a backlash if it was known - opposition was anyway portrayed by the regime as being directed from abroad. After Milosevic's overthrow when it became known, this caused a big outcry in Serbia and also abroad. Even today, for many ²⁹⁸ Two initiatives were launched as a result of the conference: A group called Community for Change that understood itself as a consortium of pro-democracy forces; and a Task Force to assist the Community for Change and to develop a comprehensive action plan. EWI served as its Secretariat.

²⁹⁹ Another workshop often referred to in this context took place in October 1999 in Budapest, organised by NDI. Activists, among them Otpor members from Serbia, received there a closed-door briefing by Doug Schoen, a Democrat who talked about an opinion poll conducted by a US firm. This showed that Milosevic had a 70% negative rating among Serbian voters, but that opposition leaders didn't fare much better. He recommended Kostunica as the one with the least negative rating.

³⁰⁰ The Center for Civic Initiatives in Belgrade translated Gene Sharp's monograph From Dictatorship to Democracy and distributed 5,500 copies.

leftists Otpor (and other Eastern European groups struggling to overthrow their governments) are puppets of the US government.³⁰¹

To assess the role and importance of the international support, it must be asked why the movement in 2000 succeeded and what was different compared to the earlier attempts to overthrow the regime.

With Mauro (2002:327) I would see the economic devastation of the country resulting from the war, the sanctions, and the failure of the government to introduce economic reforms as one cluster of factors. Other reasons were the military and diplomatic defeat in all the wars that Milosevic had waged (Croatia, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Kosovo); the unification of the opposition parties, proper organisation of the election campaign, effective election monitoring; and the readiness of Serbia's citizens to push through their electoral will, even at the cost of confrontation with the police and the army.

Otpor members and other local activists are convinced that without external support, Milosevic would still have been toppled, only perhaps later. However, media reports from that time state that these same activists considered the foreign support received as 'critical'. The financial aid may here may not have been as vital (though helpful and in case of the independent media essential throughout the 1990s) as the strategic conferences and trainings. Mathews, referring to the EWI meetings, comments:

It is difficult to know to what extent the Bratislava Process contributed to the successful overthrow of the Milosevic regime. However, members of the Task Force, some of whom are now members of the government, privately attest to the importance of the initiative, pointing out that it did provide the first real opportunity for the pro-democracy forces to meet and coalesce around a common strategy (Mathews 2001: 13)

An indicator for that is that unlike 1996-97, the movement applied a clear and unified strategy, and consciously involved many parts of society into the protest movement.

³⁰¹ A number of leftist websites pursue this topic, with authors that promote conspiracy theories not only about Europe but Latin America, Burma and other places as well: <http://www.trend.infopartisan.net/trd0607/t360607.html>, <http://www.voltairenet.org/article30032.html>, <http://www.paxamericana.net/2007/09/whats-next.html>, <http://emperors-clothes.com/engl.htm>, <http://www.wsws.org/de/2004/dez2004/porad02.shtml>, http://venezuelasolidarity.org.uk/ven/web/2007/under_cover_coups.html, <http://www.antiwar.com/szamuely/pf/p-sz050501.html>.

Examples for articles of that vein are Meyssan 2007 and Israel / Varkevisser n.d. See also http://www.b92.net/eng/news/comments.php?nav_id=42936, B92 blog discussion that reflects the Otpor issues.

Neither was the case in the earlier protests. I believe it not to be far-fetched to assume that this was an outcome of the strategic teachings by the Albert Einstein Institution (see also Carothers 2001, Mathews 2001:17). But the revolution was in my eyes nevertheless a local one, aided but not engineered. Zunes (2008) who has studied revolutionary movements all over the world states that the very fact that it was a mass movement and not a coup is proof of that. He also thinks that in spite of the support there was little understanding generally within the international community of the nonviolent movement (a phenomenon that is not surprising considering that the nonviolent movement in Kosovo met with similar ignorance).³⁰²

7.7.6: Summary: State-building, Democratisation and Civil Society Support -A Highly Political Agenda

In this last section very different approaches may seem to have been lumped together. At first glance, an international NGO advising a fledgling government on how to set up a tax system has little in common with a group of war resisters engaging in semi-clandestine work to help deserters flee their country. Nevertheless, both are part of state-building, democratisation and civil society support. In fact, the difference is not the position the external party takes towards the government in the target country as may be assumed at first glance. The solidarity movement with Kosovo had a very positive relationship to the Kosovar government under Rugova, and as described above the EU and USA started to seriously engage in furthering regime change in the FR Yugoslavia after the Kosovo war of 1999. The differences in approach perhaps arise partly from the position external civil society actors takes in regard to their own governments (and alliances of states). Supporting deserters– in spite of some good-will declarations, (see chapter 8) – has not been high on the agenda of the Western governments, and also the Kosovo issue was mostly seen from purely human rights or crisis prevention stand-points, not from a point of view of sympathy to the goals of the Kosovar movement.³⁰³

³⁰² He reported being told by Otpor leaders that the CIA even offered some of them earlier in 2000 guns which they rejected.

³⁰³ There is of course a middle field: Financing or training independent media and NGOs in particular is a field that found support by both Western governments and civil society groups within these countries. Here the political agendas of civil society and governments were not that different.

7.8 Promoting Peace Skills and Dialogue

Of course almost all peace-building has to do with peace and dialogue. So this heading must not be misunderstood. It concerns those activities and strategies that pursue peace work, dialogue or reconciliation without linking these activities or goals to other activities like social work or reconstruction aid (see above).

7.8.1 Training in Peace Skills

Education and training in relation to ‘peace skills’ was a widespread activity organised by both state and non-state actors.³⁰⁴ CDA calls it “one of the most popular approaches to peacebuilding programming” (CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects 2006:11), and in an earlier paper the same organisation wrote.

Trainings in peace skills are one of the most common methods by which international, national, and local agencies work for peace. Trainings, like other educational activities, are seen to inform people's efforts by providing new ideas and skills. Or they are seen to catalyze people to see possibilities for action where they thought things were hopeless, and to undertake activities that will help bring about peace. (CDAINC 2002)

Stovel (2000) who studied NGOs and peace education in Bosnia lists a wide spectrum of educational programmes covering active learning training for teachers, inter-community cooperation, human rights education, ‘political literacy’, diversity appreciation, education on stereotyping and prejudice, trauma healing workshops, conflict resolution training, peace education, media literacy and inter-group mixing.³⁰⁵

³⁰⁴ The term ‘peace skills’ was borrowed from the Issue Papers of the project “Reflecting on Peace Practice” by the Collaborative of Development Action, see CDAINC 2002).

³⁰⁵ Almost identically, the CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects (2006) found in Kosovo training in conflict resolution, human rights, nonviolent communication and related topics in all the communities visited for their study.

Large (n.d.:88pp) in her study describes some different approaches to training and related conflict resolution work, and also quotes examples of training agendas. On the basis of these three studies and what I found in the survey of trainings materials, it seems to me that while differing in detail, the following list of topics were most common in the trainings:

- Personal issues (identity, self-esteem, handling anger, trauma healing);
- Spirituality (depending on who gave the training –ranging from traditional Christianity to more New-Age related approaches);
- Group processes (working in a team, decision-making and leadership in groups, issues of co-ordination and conflicts between groups or within one group) ;
- Dialogue, communication, prejudice reduction and interethnic reconciliation.

Training was an activity in which both local and international groups engaged. Already mentioned for their work with war veterans have been the Centre for Nonviolent Action in Sarajevo and Belgrade, and the Croatian group Miramida that developed out of the social reconstruction project in Pakrac.³⁰⁶

Probably the first groups to facilitate trainings in nonviolence in the region were War Resisters' International (WRI) and the German Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung (Federation for Social Defence-BSV; see War Resisters' International 1994, Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung n.d.-c).³⁰⁷ As mentioned above, WRI had maintained contacts with a group in Slovenia in the 1980s. When the conflicts began, WRI activists, among them one whose home organisation was the BSV, visited Slovenia in summer 1991 and met there also with Croatian activists from a small ecology group called Green Action who were just starting up an anti-war group. They had heard that there was something like 'training for nonviolence' and wished to try it out. The German group sent three trainers down soon after in October 1991 during the war in Croatia for a first three- or four day training that was mostly meant to show the local activists what nonviolence training was about. After that training, the organisers also visited Belgrade, mostly motivated by the need to see the 'other side'

Depending on the topic of the training, there were also:

- Nonviolent action and campaigning
- 'Political and media literacy';
- various topics of special interest to the group trained, e.g. human rights, gender, community development, fundraising, management, psychological counselling etc.
- Special methods or approaches on dealing with conflict have included nonviolent communication (Marshall Rosenberg), Alternatives to Violence (a Quaker programme originally conceived for working with prison inmates), Active Listening, Alternative Dispute Resolution, and mediation.
- Training of trainers in these various types of training has played an important role.

³⁰⁶ Another example for a mixed local-international initiative is the Peace School in Gorski Kotar/Mrkopalj in Croatia. Gorski Kotar was already introduced, in 5.3 above as an example as an example of a local mediator preventing violence in his region. In consequence of the early prevention of violence, several villages in the region started to co-operate, and become an example in Croatia for moderate politics. These activities became known beyond the Croatian borders, and especially attracted the engagement of Austrian and Swiss peace activists.. From 1993 on they helped to organise a 'peace school' for children, teacher and adults. From 1996-97 on the activities expanded with the arrival of two conscientious objectors from Austrian Peace Service working with the school on a permanent basis. In 1999 and later, the Peace School also conducted one-week seminars in other places in the region like the Vojvodina, Maribor, and Banja Luka (see Wintersteiner 1994, Tiffinger and Tiffinger 1998, Tiffinger 1999, Tiffinger 2000, Austrian Peace Service 2001, Pucher 2001, OEsterreichische Friedensdienste n.d.).

³⁰⁷ This description is also partly based on personal memory having been the mentioned link between WRI and BSV, and being with the first trainers' group in October 1991.

of the conflict. Their meeting with the Centre for Antiwar Action in Belgrade resulted in more trainings also in Serbia in 1992, as well as follow-up trainings with other groups in Croatia, given by trainers approached through BSV or the WRI network.³⁰⁸

It is not easy to evaluate trainings beyond a first feed-back by participants on what they liked and did not like about the seminar. I would like to start with a quote of a Serbian grassroots' activist working with MOST, the group previously mentioned as the Serbian counterpart in the Pakrac project:

And how did my peace activism start? In 1991, I was a young psychologist, unemployed for four years, and a mother of two small children. In the former Yugoslavia, the only country I had, the war and the fallout began. ... This is when an unusual thing happened: my friend and former professor ... invited me to attend a strange seminar on mediation and nonviolent conflict transformation. ... After the seminar, some new vistas opened before me, new views on conflict in general, so that the conflict in our country too assumed another dimension; I understood that this was not only happening to us, even though I had a hard time accepting it. Wishing to share this unique experience with our colleagues and to introduce them to these ideas, we organised the first local seminar for the interested people who 'shared our ideas'. And this is how it all began, this is how the MOST group was created, the group that has since, in the fifteen years that followed (these past fifteen years), made and still makes an invaluable contribution to the promotion of the ideas of peace and tolerance among people, through various aspects of education (Kijevcacic 2007:55).

Similar observations were made in the two training evaluation meetings that took place in 1993 and 1995 in Hungary and Austria, where trainers and activists from the former Yugoslavia met with trainers from abroad (Schweitzer 1993c, Exchange Meeting Among Conflict Resolution Trainers and Peace Educators 1995, Large ³⁰⁸ Some of the British trainers later formed the Committee for Conflict Transformation Support (until 1997 Coordinating Committee for Conflict Resolution Training in Europe). The CCTS is a British group (with some international links and contacts) that was set up after discussions about training needs at the second Helsinki Citizens' Assembly in Bratislava in March 1992. Later that year trainers related to the new Committee visited Croatia, in particular the young group in Osijek with which one of the trainers, a well-known Quaker mediator, from then on formed a close relationship (Nikolic 1993:439, Anti-War Campaign Croatia 1995:233, Clark n.d., Large n.d.:7,39p and 99).

From 1992 on, trainers from CCTS regularly went to the region to conduct trainings in issues like mediation, conflict resolution etc, and also participated in two evaluation meetings with trainers and activists from the area of former Yugoslavia. In 1995 a Northern Irish member of the Committee organised an exchange project in form of a visit of peaceworkers from former Yugoslavia for eleven days to Northern Ireland to learn about the problems and reconciliation work in that country.

n.d.:91): The first and foremost effect of the trainings was personal change and empowerment.³⁰⁹

But there definitely often were two further outcomes, as was also found in Kosovo after 1999:

- There often was change of attitudes towards the other ethnic group(s), people starting to be more relaxed with them, stereotypes and ‘enemy images’ broken down. (CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects 2006:38).

How long lasting and stable such changes of attitudes were remains an unanswered question however. That would require evaluations that covered a longer period of time.

- In several cases, trainings, especially the early ones, played a role in the formation and strategic planning of new groups (see the quote above, Schweitzer 1993c, Exchange Meeting Among Conflict Resolution Trainers and Peace Educators 1995). This definitely qualifies as impact as it is understood by evaluators because it has longer-term and sustainable effects (see Rubin 1995, Paffenholz and Reyhler 2007).

7.8.2 Dialogue Projects

In the conclusions of this chapter will be discussed what different strategies and methods interveners used in order to promote inter-ethnic cooperation and eventual reconciliation. The promotion of ‘dialogue’ is (just) one of the tools for that purpose. In this section here I will look at those projects and programmes that pursued ‘dialogue pure’, or dialogue for the sake for dialogue, meaning that it was not linked to any other type of activity, be it reconstruction or social work. Also excluded here are the types of encounters that were described under middle level peace-making.

³⁰⁹ Sometimes, this may have been the only outcome, as CDA suspects in its Reflecting on Peace Processes project of the CDA that published a general paper about the role and impact of trainings in peace processes (CDAINC 2002). That paper confirms on a more general level what was found for the trainings in former Yugoslavia:

People often report that trainings have changed their lives and given them crucial skills that they then use in their own organisations, work, family, and personal lives. However, there is equally evidence that these skills usually stop at the level of the individual-that people do not subsequently train others in those skills as was originally intended, or go on to undertake new peace activities. (CDAINC 2002)

The difference between the two is the purpose: if the objective of a meeting is to concretely discuss solutions to the conflict, or if the purpose is generally to develop understanding for each other's views. That there is a grey area here does probably not need extra mention.³¹⁰

Generally the promotion of dialogue can be defined as providing opportunities (meetings, structures, processes, a 'dialogue space') for direct contact and communication between people from opposing sides. [Agencies] believe that, if well managed, dialogue will lead to mutual understanding and moderation of views (Olson 2001).

Dialogue in this context usually refers to two components of a groups' or an individual's identity: the ethnic identity (inter-ethnic dialogue) or the religious (inter-religious dialogue). At least in the case of former Yugoslavia these two were, as far as I could see, usually clearly separated.³¹¹

7.8.2.1 Inter-ethnic Dialogue

Many encounters, especially of oppositional, feminist and anti-war groups (be it seminars, workshops, or just 'meetings') took place without needing any mediation by international actors. But there have also been cases where such meetings would perhaps not have taken place if there hadn't been groups or individuals from the international civil society making them possible through 'good offices' or what at the high level would be called 'shuttle mediation', visiting groups based in the different countries at war and encouraging them to meet.³¹²

³¹⁰ In Olson's (2001) terminology: "dialogues focused on civil society". In Duffield's (1996) it would be the first of his two approaches, arranging appropriate conferences and workshops to bring people together. (The other approach he names is training in conflict resolution based on 'clarifying mistaken perceptions and providing psychological and social skills for defusing potentially tense situations'.) See also Ropers 2004 for different types of dialogue.

³¹¹ Though religion was an ethnic marker, so that when for example Muslims and Orthodox Christians talked with each other, it meant mostly ethnic Muslims (since Muslims are considered an ethnicity) and Serbs. The same with Catholics who are mostly identified with Croats.

³¹² See Large (nd:92) who lists as topics for such meetings 1. issues of co-ordination within anti-war movements; 2. clashes with local authorities over questions of eviction and minority rights; 3. differences with central governments.

One example is the work of the Nansen Academy (Norway) that helped to create the Nansen Dialogue Network which uses inter-ethnic dialogue as a tool for peaceful conflict transformation.³¹³ Its mission statement reads as follows:

§ Nansen Dialogue will, through applying the ideas and skills of dialogue, empower people who live in conflict situations to contribute to peaceful conflict transformation, and democratic development with promotion of human rights.

§ Nansen Dialogue is marked by the wish to provide a neutral and open space where the different actors in a serious conflict can meet face to face in truthful and honest communication. The aim is to break down enemy images, as well as to increase understanding of each other's positions, interests and needs. Facilitators and lecturers try to stimulate the cognitive analysis of the conflict itself and the experience of "the other's" position. The focus is not on who is right or most guilty, but on how to build respect for democratic principles, human rights and peaceful conflict resolution for future improvement of society. These principles are to be an alternative in political organisation to national chauvinism and ethnic loyalty (Nansen Academy 2008).

The work of the Nansen Academy grew continuously from its beginnings with a first seminar for 14 Bosnian students in Lillehammer in 1995. In 1998, both Serbs and Kosovo-Albanians attend their 10 week courses, followed up by workshops. The attendees remained in contact, and the groups functioned throughout the hostilities of 1998, until 1999 both communities were for some time dissolved (Clark 2000:142), but took up work later again.³¹⁴

The main activities of the network are the organization of meetings. So for example they held in 2000 a seminar on relations between Montenegro and Serbia, and in 2001 a roundtable on attitudes of young people about the status of Montenegro. Until 2000, they have had 165 participants in total (Broughton 2002:273, Nansen Academy 2008, Nansen Dijalog Centar 2008, Stallaerts 2002:317).³¹⁵

³¹³ The Nansen Academy is an institution of humanistic orientation founded in 1938 to counter the growth of totalitarian ideologies in Europe. Its main programme nowadays is adult education in philosophy and arts for students with different political, religious and cultural backgrounds. Its Department of Dialogue and Peacebuilding offers inter-ethnic dialogue seminars for various target groups, mainly from ex-Yugoslavia, but also from other conflict areas (Nansen Academy 2008).

³¹⁴ Today, in 2008, the Nansen Dialogue Network has offices in the Nansen Academy and in Oslo and Nansen Dialogue Centres in ten cities in Bosnia-Herzegovina, Croatia, Serbia, Montenegro, Kosovo and Macedonia, many of them founded in 2000 or later.

³¹⁵ Another example, with the participants probably being on the borderline between middle and grassroots' level were the dialogue support Balkan Peace Team (BPT) gave to civil society groups in Serbia and Kosovo. In 1997, the team that had part-time bases both in Belgrade and Prishtina was instrumental in bringing together Serbian anti-war activists from Nis (south Serbia), students

The promotion of dialogue has not been limited to the area of former Yugoslavia. Many initiatives in third countries working on the conflict sought contact to diaspora groups from the region. In the survey, there were a number of small citizens' groups that had this among their list of activities. In their dialogue efforts, a third side usually came in: people from the host community. The reports from such events indicate that it not always was easy to bring groups from the different sides together, but that some groups succeeded. (for example Balkan Peace Team promoting dialogue between Serbian and Kosovar students, see Mueller 2004).³¹⁶

7.8.2.2 Inter-religious Dialogue

In the survey on the former Yugoslavia some activities can be categorised as inter-religious dialogue, both high-level meetings between religious leaders, and cross-community dialogue, ecumenical masses etc. at the grassroots.³¹⁷ Sometimes this dialogue happened between two of the faith groups, sometimes several came together. As in the Middle East conflict area, protagonists of inter-religious dialogue have tended to point out that the main traditional religions in the area (Islam, Orthodox and Catholic Christianity and Judaism) all belong to the Abrahamic tradition (see Steele 2002:75). There were efforts for such dialogue right from 1992 on, for example by the Conference of European Churches (Gruppe fuer eine Schweiz ohne Arme 1992b). An example for bringing together leaders of these four communities is a meeting the World Conference of Religion and Peace brokered in October 1996 and which led to the establishment of an Inter-Religious Council in from Belgrade and Albanian students who in that year for the first time since years went to the streets for public demonstrations. The team arranged the contact and accompanied the activists to visits, but did not participate in their meetings. The contacts made between the Serbian and Albanian civil society groups led as both sides professed afterwards to not only better understanding but to mutual support in the protest activities they were engaged in, and have partly also survived the 1999 war (see Schweitzer and Clark 2002, Mueller 2006).

In 1993, a peace house in Mohacs, Hungary, was set up by Peace Bridge Basel, and supported among others by the Threshold and other NGOs from abroad. Mohacs was used over the years by many peace, anti-war and women's groups, especially from Croatia and FR Yugoslavia, and also served for the reunion of families, summer camps for younger people etc. (Mandrino 1995, Rappold 1997, Large n.d.:74).

³¹⁶ Balkan Peace Team was introduced in chapter 6 on peace-keeping.

³¹⁷ Brajovic defines as follows: "inter-religious dialogue is a formal process in which authoritative members of at least two religious communities come together for an extended and serious discussion of the beliefs and practices tat separate the communities" (Brajovic 2007:187).

1997 in Bosnia-Herzegovina. A Jew became the first chairman, succeeded in 1999 by a Catholic (Du Pont 2002:241).³¹⁸

7.8.3 'Peace Projects' With Complex Mandates

There were a number of projects that undertook a wide range of activities under the explicit headline of 'peace work'. The multi-pronged approach they share with the 'social reconstruction' projects described above in 7.3.2, but unlike them material aid has played only a minimal or no role at all. Rather typically three areas of work are combined:

- Support of civil society groups.
- Social work, identifying projects or places that then could also be used as a vehicle to further the goal of inter-ethnic collaboration. Often these are youth centres as described above, but also other places or objects were chosen – as for instance did Balkan Peace Team France(the successor of the international BPT) choose a library in Mitrovica (Kosovo) for its work from 2001 onwards (Balkan Peace Team France 2001, 2002a and 2002b, Clark 2003b).
- Training in peace skills and/or promotion of inter-ethnic dialogue.

As an example for such complex projects, I would like to describe the Osijek Peace Teams, a local 'embedded' intervener:³¹⁹

Osijek Peace Teams was a project founded by Centre for Peace, Nonviolence and Human Rights Osijek, Croatia, that was founded in 1992. This peace team project

³¹⁸ An example for grassroots' activities is a German group Oekumenischer Dienst im Konziliaren Prozess –Schalomdiakonat (Ecumenical Service in the Conciliatory Process- Shalom Diakonia). They are a group with a mostly Protestant background, and train lay people to work full-time for peace and reconciliation, accompanying those who graduate from their courses in their later work. At least in the former Yugoslavia, that work has often had an aspect of inter-religious dialogue. Thus two of its members organised inter-religious contacts, prayers, visits and seminars in Sarajevo and Republika Srpska (Voß 2000:125, Putevi Mira 2003).

Also activities of inter-religious dialogue also took place among the diaspora in third countries. For example, in 1992 two young Franciscans brought together three groups in Cologne, Germany - Christlich-islamische Gesellschaft in Koeln, Franziskaner Koeln and Zajedno Pomoci, a group that was founded out of the prayer initiative to organise humanitarian aid for Central Bosnia - to begin publicly praying for peace in Bosnia for Muslims, Jews and Christians (Neitzert 1996, Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1994).

³¹⁹ Another example for this approach though coming to the area in numbers only after the period under study and deployed by several German development and peace service organisations have been the German Civil Peace Services financed by the German Ministry for Development. See Konsortium Ziviler Friedensdienst 2006 and Footnote 285.

began with the support of the Swedish Life and Peace Institute, who financed it, and Austrian Peace Services, who deployed international volunteers to work with the Croatian volunteers recruited through the Osijek Centre (for the following, see Centre for Peace, Nonviolence and Human Rights Osijek 2001a and b).³²⁰ The project officially began in 1998 with the end of the UNTAES mission in Eastern Slavonia which meant the withdrawal of many international support structures. But there was a pilot Listening Project already from 1996 where people were interviewed about the peace efforts, the return of former neighbours and future co-habitation.³²¹ The first (10-week) training for the Osijek Peace Teams took place in summer 1998, the concrete work started in 1999, with usually one international volunteer (from September 1999 mostly coming from Austrian Peace Services) being placed in a team with several local people. Teams were deployed to several small towns or villages, living in the local communities. In Dalje, for example, they helped to set up a youth club, organised a youth summer camp for youth from Croatia and Austria and supported a school partnership with an Austrian school. In Okucani, besides workshops with children and the formation of a youth group there have also been workshops with women, a hiking club, activities to embellish the village, a psychological series of workshops for war veterans and five ecumenical services with catholic orthodox and Adventist priests. Other activities included regular legal counselling, help with dealing with authorities, courses and seminars on diverse topics (from computers to languages, election monitoring to de-mining), help to reconstruct libraries or sports halls and special activities for the reintegration of returnees or disadvantaged ethnic groups like Roma (see Reiter 2000).

As to the evaluation, initially local people had a hard time understanding the purpose of the project, expecting material humanitarian aid, and not seeing how seminars could help to improve their situation especially in view of the ‘danger’ in meeting people of the other nationality. However, as the project became better understood, it became more successful. An external evaluation showed the listening programme, along with other activities, empowering those who had been implementing it as well as those being listened to, in the way that it reduced their prejudices and fears of the other nationality, it raised the communication with the other nationality to a higher level, and it increased their motivation to participate in peace activities (Centre for Peace, Nonviolence and Human Rights Osijek 2001b:107);

³²⁰ And also Grabner 1999, Unger and Leitner 1999, Ruessmann 1999d, Leitner et al. 2000, Reiter 2000, Mathews 2001:100p, Kruhonja and Ivanovic 2002, Milan and Stanic 2002.

³²¹ By the term of Listening Project is meant a specific method developed as far as I know in the USA where interviewers ask people about their opinions on critical issues, allowing people to express and vent their own thoughts and feelings. This is seen as a tool for coming to terms with a difficult situation. Sometimes the interveners take what they are hearing in the interviews as basis for identifying concrete needs that then are met by more practical interventions (for example planning of concrete aid), but sometimes ‘listening’ remains a tool of its own. The Osijek Peace Teams based many of their interventions on such Listening Projects.

The summary of the evaluation published by Centre for Peace, Nonviolence and Human Rights Osijek (2001b:116pp) lists a very large number of further general and specific achievements, as well as areas that need improvement, the latter mostly raising issues around management, project monitoring, training and preparedness of staff.

7.8.4 Summary: Promoting Peace Skills and Dialogue Work - Only One Approach in Peace-building

There have been many more examples of peace and dialogue work than could be mentioned in this chapter. Especially external civil society groups with a peace movement or nonviolence movement background tended to engage in this field. In the coming chapter on advocacy work I will show how this interest shaped discussions and the institutionalisation of new programmatic funding and types of projects in these third countries. However, from what has been described in this chapter so far, it is clear that such 'peace work pure' is only one strategy in peace-building. As most other approaches it displays a list of success stories (like Nansen) as well as considerable lack of impact in other cases.

7.9 Cultural Activities

This last category of peace-building activities is relatively small. There were meetings and workshops of artists, for example Italian writers meeting Bosnian writers, financed by the Italian Fondo Alberto Moravia (Marcon 2000:14). The Austrian Peace Service supported in 1998 a ten-day workshop of painters with a dozen artists from Vojvodina, the Krajina, Slovakia and Rumania. The paintings were sold and the money donated for refugees (Buchmayer 1998, Eckert and Ellensohn 1999).

Many NGOs engaged in the organisation of sports events, often in the context of other work (see the International Volunteer Project Pakrac described above; ICVA 2000).

Similarly, concerts, theatre plays and readings were a popular activity, often linked with the message of 'peace'. So organised for example the Open Society Fund in Belgrade in 1992 a 'Music of Peace' festival (Large n.d.:55). In a somewhat different spirit, Greek artists came to solidarity concerts in Belgrade on invitation of the Greek-Serb Friendship Association in 1992 (Michas 2002:19,24,34). Joan Baez gave a solidarity concert in May 1993 in Sarajevo (Morillon 1993:187). And Pax Christi Flanders and Netherlands organised a multicultural music festival together with the Musicians Without Borders in summer 2000 in several towns in Kosovo, as well as a festival in Macedonia. (De Vrieze 2002:298, Lubbers and Wagenaar 2001).

Another typical activity was to invite artists to third countries, publish CDs of local musicians, or to organise exhibitions. So did for example the small local citizens' group Bosnien-Forum Singen prepare an exhibition by painters of all ethnic groups, calling it 'exhibition of reconciliation' (Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1996, Berdi 1996).

Some NGOs or other donors sought to establish more permanent institutions to support arts. For example, the German-Bosnian-Herzegovinan Society in Travnik set up an artist-in-residence programme to revive the cultural scene, where artists were sponsored to stay for up to three month in the centre if they committed to work creatively for the community (Fischer and Tumler 2000:25pp).

Many of the organisers of the events or other projects here argued – as much as could be discerned from the material available - that their work contributed to the development of the country or region in question, and also to reconciliation because it targeted the different ethnic, formerly enemy, groups.

7.10 Conclusions

Peace-building activities by civil society actors were described in nine categories: 1. relief work, 2. disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of soldiers (DDR), 3. reconstruction and refugee return, 4. social and psycho-social work, 5. economic recovery, 6. transitional justice and human rights documentation, 7. state-building, democratisation and civil society support, 8. promoting peace skills and dialogue and 9. cultural activities.

The actors in peace-building have ranged from small informal citizens' groups to large organisations that can compete in terms of outreach and resources with state actors. In this chapter here I have tried to make sure to include those actors who in chapter 2.3.1 were called 'embedded' actors, meaning local groups seeking to intervene in the conflicts in their own or in a neighbouring country (like Osijek Peace Teams, Centre for Nonviolent Action Sarajevo, MOST etc) not only because they have done (and are mostly still doing) interesting and successful work, but also because this category tends to be overlooked. Peace-building still too often translates to people coming from abroad.³²² Another observation that has repeatedly been made throughout the chapter (especially in the sections on relief, social work, civil society support and solidarity work) is the enormous number of small citizen groups and initiatives with a peace movement background that became active supporting war victims and civil society groups in the former Yugoslavia. The degree of activities in this field justifies use of the concept of a movement of support – a question that will be taken up again in chapter 8.

As to target groups of aid, it can be observed that there were some groups clearly favoured, while others were neglected. Main target groups have been women, refugees/IDPs and youth, because they were considered as being either being particularly affected by war or (in the case of youth) particularly open for reconciliation efforts. Often neglected were elderly people, former soldiers, and sometimes also generally those who had stayed during the wars rather than to flee. Some civil society interveners were conscious of this fact and tried to include these groups (for example, building homes for senior people or working with veterans), but generally it can be noticed that this happened rather late compared to the aid to the other groups (see Sali-Terzic 2001:143).

³²² In the case of the former Yugoslavia here it could not be claimed that these locals in fact were more important than the internationals – for such a claim there were simply too many internationals. But there are other countries around the world (for example the Philippines) where the relationship is indeed reversed.

7.10.1 The Main Instruments of Civil Society Peace-building

On an abstract level, the main instruments used by civil society actors were

1. Material aid (humanitarian relief, building materials, materials for income-generating projects, money, etc);
2. Information (training of various sorts, from vocational training to training how to overthrow a dictator, documentation of human rights violations);
3. Other non-physical support (all the different activities involving intervening actors working with local people, be it institution-building, or working with youth, traumatised people, local NGOs, refugees etc.)

In general, there are two more instruments of peace-building: 4. force and 5. law, but both were more or less been prerogatives of state actors, though being supported occasionally by civil society actors.³²³

In some cases, as shown in the sections on support of refugees and deserters, civil society groups have turned to methods of civil disobedience, defying the laws and regulations of sometimes several states (both in former Yugoslavia and the laws of the country they lived in) to help people escape from the war.

7.10.2 The Main Goals of Civil Society Peace-Building

These instruments were used to achieve a limited number of general goals and objectives listed below, matching rather well the three functions of peace-building listed in chapter 2: reversing the destructive processes of war through various forms of aid (goal 1), addressing relationships (goal 2), and dealing with structural issues, in particular state and civil society reform (goal 3).

³²³ Examples of force would be the international administration in the protectorates opening roads and access to villages for refugee return, firing politicians and closing media who did not comply with the administration, e.g. worked against refugee return or continued to promote ethnic hatred. The best example for the instrument of law is the International Tribunal (ICTY).

7.10.2.1 Meet Basic Needs Like Food, Housing and Health

This was the primary objective in humanitarian relief, reconstruction, medical and psychological aid projects. It mostly had an approach focused on individuals.

Compared with what is happening in many countries in the southern hemisphere, the relief efforts in the war-affected countries can be considered a success by humanitarian standards in spite of the fact that not all areas were always reached, and people in isolated places suffered serious shortages.³²⁴

There have, however, been definite issues around ‘doing harm’ in relief, reconstruction and economic development aid:

- Often relief organizations during the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina were made to give part of their relief to paramilitaries controlling access to the regions they wanted to reach.
- Humanitarian aid when channeled through local elites (as was often done) increased their power, and invited in many cases bribery by potential recipients (see Belloni 2000:6).
- The sheer amount of aid coming especially to Bosnia-Herzegovina and Kosovo certainly had negative effects on social-economic development: its negative impact on the labor market included ‘creaming off’ qualified local workers to earn much higher salaries with international bodies, while aid agencies met responsibilities that otherwise would have been the state’s, (see Schneckener 2003:58). Pugh (1998:4) speaks of fostering “aid junkies”, while Woodward (2002:199pp) also mentions economic distortions introduced by international presence.
- At several instances in the text I refer to projects that contributing to tensions in communities rather than dissolving them – for example different actors having different policies on reconstructing houses in one and the same community.
- Both in reconstruction and relief another sore issue often was how to choose the recipients. There seems to were no ‘golden way’: For example, if outside interveners simply distributed housing materials equally among the ethnic groups independent of need, they had problems to justify their choices either in regard of their own objective to help those most in need, or vis-à-vis the local authorities. However, if they consulted the local authorities and asked them to do the choosing, this often opened the way to bribery and advantage-taking by certain groups.

³²⁴ There was some discussion on whether the relief efforts prolonged the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina (see Burg and Shoup 1999:400, Friedenspolitische Perspektiven im ehemaligen Jugoslawien 1995). From an ethical point of view I find it impossible to accept that argument since what it proposes is not intervening to alleviate concrete suffering on the assumption that in so doing a more abstract future suffering could be turned aside.

7.10.2.2 Promote Inter-ethnic Cooperation and Reconciliation

I was struck by how the goal of interethnic cooperation or reconciliation of the different ethnic groups penetrated almost all peace-building activities. It seems (and could be demonstrated by numerous quotes) that most intervening actors (including the state actors) considered the ethnic splits the main problem to overcome, assuming that if there was co-habitation and co-operation, future violence would be prevented.³²⁵ This objective was clearly stated as the primary one in a number projects and programmes (for example the dialogue projects, many of the trainings and the work of the civil peace services). In many other cases it was not the ‘official’ or declared primary objective (that was e.g. reconstruction, return or setting up a youth centre) but the basic goal that the interveners pursued, almost using the declared objective as a ‘Trojan Horse’. Examples are the ‘social reconstruction’ projects, most of the youth work, some economic programmes as well as many civil society building efforts.³²⁶ One observation repeatedly made in the context of such projects was that the other (more material) work done by the internationals was ³²⁵ This was also observed by Cox:

All international strategies in Bosnia are based on assumptions as to the extent of these ethnic divisions, and whether they are a permanent or transient feature of the social environment. Every international programme has an ethnic dimension to it, whether the programme is expressly designed to promote ethnic reconciliation or merely meets with obstacles presented by ethnic conflict. International strategic planning can be analysed along a spectrum from ethnic reintegration on the one side, which assumes that ethnic identity can ultimately be removed from the political process, to ethnic accommodation on the other, whereby ethnicity is assumed to be a quasi-permanent feature of the region, to be controlled or contained within political structures (Cox 1998:7).

³²⁶ Ryan (1995:134pp) has called this strategy ‘contact plus the pursuit of superordinate goals’, including among others joint activities (for example youth clubs, sports, reconstruction efforts), economic interdependence by furthering small trade between the ethnic groups, and the creation of multi-ethnic institutions (for example community centres, NGOs, media). See also CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects 2006:11.

essential for them to build up trust, and be able to work on inter-ethnic cooperation. It gave them legitimization and access under circumstances when people found it hard to understand what somebody wanted who did not distribute material aid or build something, and also helped them avoid to speak in the first place about 'peace' or 'reconciliation'.

Many actors found that that term 'reconciliation' was not generally well received in the area. Many people felt that it was just asking too much, and that it imposed foreign agendas not shared by the local community. In response some of the international actors decided to make reconciliation a long-term ultimate goal rather than a concrete project objective that was shared immediately with the recipients of a project (see Committee for Conflict Transformation Support 2001). Others, especially those active in the social movements, rejected the implied analysis, arguing that the conflicts were not ethnic in nature but political, and that therefore reconciliation between the ethnic groups was not the appropriate approach.

Given the omnipresence of this goal, hard evidence of success is astonishingly modest. Sometimes organisations mention concrete indicators like that there was now a multi-ethnic foot-ball team or women's group. Even the US Institute for Peace (2003) named as indicators for reconciliation that a Sarajevan folk singer planned a concert in Banja Luka, that the Herzegovinan (Croat) coach of the national football team expressed his intention to include Serbs, and that a Bosnian Serb winner of a national beauty contest declared that she would represent her homeland Bosnia-Herzegovina rather than the Serbian Republic. While each of such cases of course are nice to cite, they mean in my eyes very little in regard to overall society-wide attitudes, and even less regarding the question if the ethnic gaps had been bridged to a degree that they could not be re-opened. The pre-1991 history of Yugoslavia itself shows that cooperation in peace times is different from developing relations that withstand the future potential for violence: periods of ethnic violence were several times followed by periods where the conflicts became latent and ethnic identity went into the background. More recently, in Kosovo, the study by the Collaborative of Development Action on the influence peace-building projects a propos the March 2004 riots underlines this difference. Many peace-building programmes that achieved some level of inter-ethnic cooperation did not contribute significantly to the prevention or restraint of interethnic violence in the riots of 2004 (2006:60pp).

Most programming assumed that the transfer from individual-level change to more socio-political change would happen automatically. Agencies typically assumed that the results of their activities would automatically “spill over” into other domains of participants’ lives—that the profound personal and relationship changes catalysed by NGO activities would lead to changes in political attitudes and actions, or trickle out to influence others in the community or trickle up to influence key decision makers. Many assumed that participants who had had a transformative experience in the programme would spread their experience and changed attitudes to others – from family to colleagues to the community at large. The evidence gathered in this research suggests that this did not happen, at least not automatically, and that such “spill over” cannot be assumed (CDA- Collaborative Learning Projects 2006:47).

In Bosnia-Herzegovina and in Croatia, ethnic cooperation to some degree was enforced by the international (state) interveners. In Kosovo, they have tried but barely succeeded – most Serbs and other ethnic minorities have preferred either to live in enclaves or have left the country altogether. To what extent civil society programmes have aided in changing attitudes is difficult to assess – the individual project reports (that often are about only one or a few specific communities) imply they did, but what the relationship if any is there to an overall change is impossible to say, nor is it possible to determine how much such changes would have occurred unaided over time, simply just based on local resources and without the direction of an international operation.

7.10.2.3 Restore a Functioning Society, State and Economy and Promote Political Change

This goal covers the various reconstruction and state-building efforts, the measures taken to develop a sustainable economy, as well as many projects designed to further independent media and civil society organisations. Clearly most of these activities did not happen from a non-partisan position but used the template of what the international interveners considered the best models.

Much has been written about the shortcomings and the sometimes erroneous assumptions in state-building and institution-building in the protectorates but my concern here is to discuss the role of civil society actors. They were mostly to be found in the category of ‘civil society building’ which could mean many different things, from various ways of supporting local groups and media to networking, training or dialogue activities. This work was often accompanied by a somewhat vague picture of what civil society is - other than assuming that it somehow is important for sustainable peace (see Belloni 2000:10, McMahon 2001, Prendergast and Plumb 2002:327).³²⁷

Based on the survey, it seems to me that civil society support and state-building was effective where the international interveners had good knowledge of the situation on the ground, and started their work from a sound assessment of needs and cooperation with already existing groups rather than introducing plans devised abroad and then artificially setting up new NGOs to implement them.³²⁸ Purely material support – in spite of the risk of dependence which of course is a negative factor – and international networking and linking seem to be especially essential, with capacity-building and training being more debatable (see the negative findings in the evaluation of media support).³²⁹ Smillie mentions that many NGOs received the same training again and again. “For many, the problem is not ‘how to write a report’, but how to write six reports, in English, in six different formats every quarter, or even every month”(Smillie 1996:6).

³²⁷ There are at least two very different concepts of civil society: one is the Eastern European developed in socialist times that sees civil society in contrast to the state, being ‘non-political’ in the meaning of party-politics. That was also the predominant understanding of civil society in the former Yugoslavia – for example most anti-war groups claimed to be ‘not political’ by which they meant not having relations to any political parties. The other view – probably more the Western European and US-American one - sees civil society in the tradition of de Tocqueville where democracy depends on checking the power of the state by what he calls a ‘political society’, and with much more tolerance and inclusiveness regarding political parties (Crook 2001). On the whole it seems to me that the second view was the predominant one in the interventions on former Yugoslavia, often meeting and sometimes conflicting with the ‘non-political’ view of local actors.

³²⁸ Gagnon (1998 and 2002) studied five different NGOs that all pursued the goal of reconstructing civil society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. He found that the most effective were those who used reconstruction projects as the focus, and those who focused on capacity-building for local NGOs. As less successful he rated party-building and civic education because it used the North American model and misunderstood the political reality in Bosnia. However, his small sample in my eyes really does not permit such general conclusions because their relative effectiveness or non-effectiveness may be explained by the identity of the individual interveners (the party builders was the US National Democratic Institute - no wonder that they used the US model). The positively rated NGO capacity-building was done by Delphi-STAR, a US women project very close to the grassroots and knowing exactly what the needs of civil society were. This was by far not the case with all capacity-building projects.

³²⁹ Though there is also a danger to international networking, namely if it leads to the local groups being focused more on these international networks than on building local alliances (see Stubbs 2007:221).

Contrasting the examples of Kosovo and FR Yugoslavia I tried to argue above that determined support by international civil society made a difference, but that that kind of support was not always forthcoming. One observation in this context was that that goal was not limited to support of political parties and civil society, but also was on the agenda of many relief and reconstruction efforts, especially those by ‘non-professional’ interveners like peace movement groups.

8. Addressing Other External Actors: Public Information, Support Activities, Protest and Advocacy by Civil Society Actors

The activities described in the last three chapters on peace-making, peace-keeping and peace-building have not exhausted the list of what was found in the survey. The omissions can be identified as:

- Information directed at the general public - media outside of former Yugoslavia and ‘pure research’ studying the conflicts;
- Activities supporting intervening actors - applied research, funding, coordination and capacity-building of other intervening external actors.
- Numerous activities of protest and advocacy targeting other intervening actors or the general public, seeking to inform them and/ or to change their behaviour;

In the first section of this chapter I will look at the role of media – both the mainstream mass media and so-called alternative media seeking to disseminate ‘other’ or ‘true’ information on the conflicts.³³⁰

The second section of this chapter shortly addresses activities that support other interveners, for example training field staff or networking among intervening groups.

The main focus of this chapter lies on protest and advocacy by civil society actors that was taking place outside the conflict area. I use the term ‘advocacy’ to refer to efforts that seek to convince other actors (usually state actors) through means of information and dialogue to take or not take certain action. It is closely related to lobbying, except that lobbying may refer to the direct pursuit of the vested interests of the lobbying group (for example to lobby a Ministry to finance a training for conflict interveners that would be given by the lobbying group). Advocacy includes lobbying, but in addition entails activities like giving advice from which, if heeded, the advocating group would not directly profit (for example advising a government to deploy preventive peace-keeping forces in an area).

³³⁰ I am leaving out here the second type of actor involved in producing and disseminating information: the scientific studies produced in the academic world. The results of the numerous scientific studies have been quoted throughout this book, but a meta analysis of the research done, its approaches, interests and potential influence has been beyond the scope of this study, and therefore is not mentioned beyond this introduction.

Both protest and advocacy mushroomed in the second half of 1991 when the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia became violent. Protest and advocacy was not the sole prerogative of peace and related movements though they played an important role here. Aid organisations, human and minority rights groups, women's groups, and of course diaspora organisations all raised their voices in the first years of the conflicts until the end of the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina. The target of the protests was rarely the actors on the ground. Most protest and advocacy was directed at other intervening actors – the so-called 'international community' that was asked to take (or not take) certain action. Different issues were addressed and contradictory positions, for example both for and against military intervention, put forward. Protest developed again in late 1998 and in 1999 during the Kosovo war, but this time it was mostly the peace movement and related groups that carried the protest, and its focus was critique of the NATO intervention. And when in 2001 a civil war in Macedonia seemed to develop, it were also mostly these peace groups responding though their reactions and activities were only a shadow of what took place in 1989.

I divide the analysis of protest and advocacy into two parts: In the first part I will discuss the different issues with which they dealt. The second part then looks at the main instruments used. The sources used have been mostly publications and grey material by the actors themselves – other than two smaller publications by Schmitz (1998) and Large (n.d.).

This chapter is the last one describing the interventions of civil society actors in the former Yugoslavia. After completing the analysis of the different areas of activity, I will return in the conclusions to the question already raised in the preceding chapter, namely if there has been a social movement of its own forming on the wars in former Yugoslavia.

8.1 Disseminating Public Information: The Role of International Media

8.1.1 The Mainstream Mass Media

The role of ‘globalised’ media in conflict has become a topic for debate since at least the wars in Iraq in 1990-91.³³¹ There is a discussion in media research on the amount and kind of political influence media can wield (the ‘CNN effect’, see Kent 2006:177pp), as Barker has observed:

Policymaking is a political process which is affected by various social and economic factors... and media systems play an integral role in shaping the social context in which policies are developed. Through the media, citizens learn how government policies will affect them, and governments gain feedback on their policies and programs. Media systems act as the primary conduit between those who might want to influence policy and the policymakers – controlling the scope of political discourse and regulating the flow of information. (Barker 2005:2)

The mainstream media from summer 1991 onwards were full of headlines and reports on the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia – random samples of newspapers from Britain, France, Italy, Spain and Germany indicate that there was virtually no day without mention of it in the major newspapers throughout these countries and probably all of Western Europe.³³²

The US government at first tried to stay aloof and its change of attitude towards the war in Bosnia has largely been attributed to media influence. For example, it has been claimed that the pictures and reports of the Muslim detainees in the Bosnian Serb detention centre at Trnopolje in August 1992, and the pictures from the Sarajevo market bombing in February 1994 “led to changes in the application of foreign policies that have had a direct bearing on the war” (Weaver 1998, see also Kent 2006, Malik 2003). Gow (1997:215) mentions pressure from both the media and public opinion for the US to be involved, especially during spring 1993 when the Vance-Owen Plan was discussed.³³³ Media reports in 1992 and 1993 on the rapes of Bosnian women wielded a heavy influence, albeit using figures based on estimates and extrapolation that later turned out to be exaggerated (Meder and Reimann 1996:11, Chandler 1999:96, Lucarelli 2000:35).³³⁴ Kent (2006:4) attributes the provision of soldiers to UNPROFOR for purely humanitarian tasks as a direct effect of the ‘something must be done’ message promoted by the media.

³³¹ There are many books as well as dozens of articles have been written on how media contributed to create the context in which foreign policy on the conflicts in former Yugoslavia (and other wars) operated. See Barker 2005, Zoellner 2005 and Kent 2006 for bibliographies on the topic.

³³² TV reporting probably was of similar frequency but I have not been able to research their reporting.

³³³ Public opinion polling in that time showed that the majority of the US people wanted the government to intervene (see Gow 1997:215p).

An interesting side effect noted by Kent was the indirect influence of the reporting on Yugoslavia on other conflicts:

It seems quite likely that US policymakers, in August 1992 after the Omarska camp story broke, perceived Somalia to be an easier intervention than getting involved in Bosnia, and more likely to achieve results and save lives (Kent 2006:214).

Other than these concrete examples, the main role of the mass media has probably been in agenda setting and ‘framing’, meaning influencing how what is happening is interpreted (see Kent 2006:194pp). One example of such framing would be the description of the Bosnian war and where to place the blame for what happened, namely summarily blaming ‘the Serbs’, directed from Belgrade, for a ‘war of aggression’.³³⁵

Of course the flow of influence is not one-way. Politicians (and others) also seek to influence public opinion through passing or withholding information to the media. This was particularly obvious in the Kosovo/FR Yugoslavia war in 1999 (see ³³⁴ Kent notes the same influences on the British government, and quotes Douglas Hurd’s “attack on the ‘something must be done’ school of journalism”, seeing a “consistent use of all media by politicians” (Kent 2006:2-3 and 208).

³³⁵ The interventions by the different actors were all guided by some implicit or explicit assumption on the character of the conflict (see Cox 1998:7pp, Kaufman 2001:4pp). In international government circles, two variants of the civil war/ethnic conflict paradigm were the most common. The first variant was to see the wars as a truly ethnic conflict with all sides to blame. The arms embargo against all republics of former Yugoslavia which was maintained (at least officially) until end of 1995 is maybe the best expression of this attitude. Most famous and often referred to is President Clinton reading Richard Kaplan’s Balkan Ghosts and deciding that because of the intractability of the conflict there was nothing really he or anybody else could do (see Bernecker 2001). This may be more an anecdote handed down from author to author, but in general this view was shared by many – all violence in the area was seen as one single ‘civil war’.

The other variant which quickly came to dominate the politics of the international community put the blame on Serb nationalism, and therefore focussed its efforts on destroying the capabilities of ‘the Serbs’ to wage war. The sanctions against FR Yugoslavia, as well as the air strikes in Bosnia that targeted exclusively the Serbian troops, are examples for this. In both cases there was the general pretext that all sides were to be treated equally, and that misbehaviour from any side would lead to consequences, but in fact breaches of agreements by Croats and Bosniaks were usually only punished by declarations and at most by the threat of sanctions (see Woodward 1995:7pp, de Jonge Oudraat 1999:70).

Ackerman and Naureckas 2000, Herman and Peterson 2000).³³⁶ A blatant example of the manipulation of the media by NATO was the reporting on the bombing of a civilian train in April 1999. NATO published a videotape showing the train moving very fast to prove that it was not possible to divert the missiles. Later it turned out that the video was played at three times the normal speed (Skoco and Woodger 2000:86).

According to Herman and Peterson (2000:113) CNN in particular served throughout the war as a reliable “de facto information partner” repeating the information fed to them by NATO without questioning it. This was in contrast to other media outlets such as the German paper Frankfurter Rundschau which at least put a warning in their paper every day that the information they received was restricted and therefore unreliable.

With regard to the British print media Hammond (2000) makes an interesting observation: The conservative press while supporting the British military expressed some caution and questions about the NATO war, but the more liberal section followed the Blair government in its emotionally loaded moral assessment of a ‘just war’.³³⁷ Public service broadcaster BBC maintained a more independent line, for example showing the effects of the NATO bombings on civilians. Also the mainstream media in other European countries basically supported the war as did their governments (with the exception of Greece) though in some countries critical voices may have been stronger than in the US and Britain (Deichmann 2000, Johnstone 2000b, Røn 2000, Hammond and Herman 2000). The Russian media mirrored similarly mostly the opposition of their government of the war although disagreeing over several issues like the position towards Milosevic, the significance of the war for Russia’s position in the world and the notion of Slavic fellow-feeling (Hammond, Nizamova and Savelieva 2000).

³³⁶ According to Skoco and Woodger (2000:85), NATO did not have a sophisticated media strategy at the beginning of the war, being focussed on preparing for its 50th anniversary and expecting the bombing to be short and the media not to be very interested. When the war continued, NATO made efforts to correct this and by the end of the war it had a well functioning PR system in place.

³³⁷ From my own observation, that has not been the case for German media, though the same observation can be made in regard to the different political parties and their attitude to the war.

8.1.2 Alternative Media

The 1990s was the decade when the internet was developed. At the beginning of that decade there were only e-lists that featured information on the conflicts since 1991-92 (APC / Yugo / Antiwar and CL/ Europe / Balkan were two such lists). The creation of websites and e-mail as a (mass) means of communication spread later.

NGOs were a significant source of 'alternative' information – that is, information that either could not be found in the mass media at all or that came with a different interpretation.³³⁸ They all reported regularly on the conflicts, mixing analysis, reports on actions their constituencies were engaged in, and reports on local groups in the region.

In addition there were also newly created magazines and publications: The Helsinki Citizens' Assembly founded YugoFax in September 1992. At the beginning it was a printed paper that analyzed the progress of the war, examined the specific problems facing individual republics, covered the failure of the European Community to bring peace, and emphasised the importance of citizens' initiatives in bringing about a resolution (Editorial of Yugofax 1992).

It cooperated with the Institute of War and Peace Reporting (IWPR, based in London) that had begun a War Report during the second Gulf war. In 1992, YugoFax was merged with the revived War Report and became Yugo WarReport. Bulletin of the Institute for War and Peace Reporting.³³⁹ The speciality of IWPR's reports was that it gave a voice to independent journalists from the area rather than sending out foreign journalists to do the reporting. The reports were published in English and in ³³⁸ Examples would be Pogrom as the magazine of the Gesellschaft fuer bedrohte Voelker (Society for Threatened People), Nonviolence Actualité, a magazine close to Mouvement pour une alternative non-violente (MAN), Peace News (WRI), ZAM-Zeitschrift fuer Antimilitarismus (Newspaper for Antimilitarism) of the Austrian 'Arge fuer Wehrdienstverweigerung und Gewaltfreiheit' (a group supporting conscientious objection), Friedensforum (Netzwerk Friedenskooperative, Germany, an umbrella of German peace movement), The Nonviolent Activist (War Resisters' League USA).

³³⁹ In 1992 it changed its name to Balkan War Report, and in 1998 after stopping the print version to IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report, now sent out for free by e-mail (see War Report 1998). Today, the IWPR has expanded its reports also to other areas of the world (Caucasus, Africa, Philippines – see www.IWPR.net) but the Balkan has remained one of its foci.

Croatian/Serbian and Albanian, and clearly had twin targets: people in the region looking for independent information, and people in other countries.³⁴⁰

As to the main functions of the alternative media, it can be said that they sought to address two, sometimes three target groups: their own constituency with the goal to inform them, shape their opinion and report what was done in their name; the wider public (as far as it could be reached), offering information that differed from what could be found in the mass media; and sometimes also the public in the crisis areas. It is impossible to directly discern impact these alternative media had other than being a reference in the controversial debates on the conflicts. But the fact that IWPR has widened the range of its activities and is now offering the same kind of service with journalists from many countries and conflicts in the world could be considered an indicator that there is a need and a 'market' for that type of information.

8.2 To Support Interventions by Other Actors

Under this category which could be considered a form of 'indirect intervention' fall all those activities that have other intervening actors, not local actors in the former Yugoslavia as their target group, seeking to support their work in various ways: through applied research, money, networking, information gathering or capacity-building.

8.2.1 Applied Research

Research institutes as actors are mentioned in three other sections of this study:

Under peace-making because a few of them have engaged local actors actively in the ³⁴⁰ A somewhat similar approach was taken by the Group for a Switzerland without an Army (GSOA), an initiative that originally was founded to organise a referendum for the abolition of the Swiss Army end of the 1980s. They had good contacts to groups in the area of former Yugoslavia, and initiated a magazine they called Para Pacem in October 1992. Its objective was to document the activities of groups that work against the war in former Yugoslavia, [and to] give the non-nationalistic opposition committed to violence a voice especially in Switzerland. (Para Pacem 1996:2).

In c. 2001 the makers of the magazine created an independent NGO to continue the project under the new name Medienhilfe (media help).

The German Initiative fuer Frieden (IFIAS), an NGO very close to the Social Democrat party, for some time translated and distributed between 1992 and 1994 the magazine ARKzin of the Croatian anti-war movement (Initiative fuer Frieden 1994).

search of negotiated solutions, under ‘information’ above for ‘pure’ or non-applied research, and under advocacy (below) because many such institutes were providing advice to shape or influence the policy of (state) interveners. Another type is that kind of applied research that sought to directly support the work of interveners (both state and non-state) through expertise, evaluations and in a few cases action research.³⁴¹

8.2.2 Funding

A very important issue for civil society actors is to find the funds for their work.

Generally, there are five possible sources:

- Money already owned by them;³⁴²
- Individual donations from small and large donors;³⁴³
- Grants from governments and international organisations (EU, UN-organisations);³⁴⁴
- Grants by other (often intermediate) foundations or agencies;³⁴⁵
- Grants by companies.³⁴⁶

³⁴¹ One example would be the Life and Peace Institute in Uppsala (Sweden). At the beginning of the conflicts in 1992 it ran a research project on the role of the churches in the conflict, sending a researcher who at the same time taught at universities (Life and Peace Institute 1992).

³⁴² An example here is the Berghof Foundation for Conflict Transformation that covers its core costs with funds donated by a private person, while grants - e.g. from the German Foreign Ministry - are sought for special projects.

³⁴³ An NGO almost exclusively relying on individual donations collected through its regular supporters and additional mass mailings is the German Komitee fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie (Komitee fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie 2008). Also the Balkan Peace Team (chapter 6) and the Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung relied heavily on donations from individuals (Balkan Peace Team 1999, Mueller 2006:191pp.)

³⁴⁴ See the UNDP-financed reconstruction projects described in chapter 7. Most Western countries have such agencies or at least funding schemes run either through their Foreign or their Development Ministries.

³⁴⁵ An example would be the Olof Palme International Centre in Sweden. The Swedish state agency SIDA wished to support local NGOs and independent media but sought international implementing partners to channel the money. An intermediate recipient was the Olof Palme International Centre that worked in the area since it was founded in 1992. It received its money from SIDA, and conducted its work - mostly about support of local peace initiatives - through local organisations (NGOs, independent trade unions, parties) as implementing partners. In 1998-99 it had more than 30 such partners that all were financially dependent on the Centre (Duffield 1996, Evensmo 2000).

Funding is usually mentioned as one of the first issues when discussing the challenges of the implementation of projects. Especially smaller organisations like Balkan Peace Team struggled to the degree of damaging the programme to find funds for their work (see Mueller 2006:191pp). And as with local NGOs, so too international NGOs depending on donors and grants had to deal with the annual grant schemes that made medium-term projects difficult, with the interests, expectations and directions of donors, and had to adapt their plans in order to receive grants.

8.2.3 Co-ordination and Networking

Co-ordination and networking between international actors also have to be counted as support activities. In the former Yugoslavia, it was often the role of the UNHCR to bring international NGOs together, and in Kosovo OMIK set up NGO Resource Centres in several regions of Kosovo (Antikriegshaus Sievershausen 1995, Woodward 1995:296, Lucarelli 2000:35, CORE 2002:54). But there were also NGOs playing an important role in co-ordination:

- The International Council of Voluntary Agencies (ICVA) not only supported local NGOs (see chapter 7) but also extended its services to the co-ordination of international groups. For example it produced an annual address list of NGOs with information on the fields they are working in (ICVA 2000, Bekkering 1997, Stubbs 1996b).
- In several countries there were national meetings of organisations working on the conflicts in former Yugoslavia. In Britain the National Peace Council was hosting a Working Group to serve this purpose. In Germany there was a Coordinating Committee coordinated by the Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung and financed by the Green Party Foundation (Heinrich Boell Stiftung) that met regularly between November 1991 and December 1995.³⁴⁷

³⁴⁶ Many organisations, for example the International Crisis Group have been combining several of the funding sources. In their report for 2007 they list 19 governmental donors from different parts of the world, 15 foundations and 14 companies in addition to also collecting individual donations (International Crisis Group 2008).

³⁴⁷ Usually it was attended by 10-20 participants from different groups, and exchanging about both the political assessment of the war situation, and about projects the participants were either planning or already carrying out (see the different minutes of the National Peace Council and of the (Ex-) Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis in the bibliography).

8.2.4 Organising Information Visits to the Area

There were a number of visits that were organised by groups with previous knowledge of the area to introduce others (either other NGO representatives, sometimes also politicians or media people) to the problems and conflicts of former Yugoslavia. Just to give one example: A peace researcher based in Linz (Austria) organised a delegation from Linz to Kosovo in 1993 in the context of an attempt to convince the town to enter a twinning relationship with Prishtina. The delegation took place after Linz had rejected that proposal of twinning but offered to finance the delegation instead. The report of the delegation was published and together with a slide show used for further public relations work. One result was that the town started to support the demand to put Kosovo under international administration (Steinweg 1994 and Steinweg ed. 1994).

8.2.5 Capacity-Building with Conflict Intervention Actors

In the survey I found several organisations, mostly grassroots' peace organisations, which organised trainings for people planning to work in the region.³⁴⁸ The German Civil Peace Service - already mentioned in chapter 7 - was one. Since its work started in 1997, there were during the period under study usually two courses of about 4 months each year, with between 12 and 20 participants.³⁴⁹ Especially in the first years many participants went to the area of former Yugoslavia under the Civil Peace Service scheme or with comparable projects.³⁵⁰

Training for nonviolent intervention is a topic that deserves deeper analysis and description because there have been many developments over the last ten years –

³⁴⁸ Civilians sent by state agencies at that time usually went without extra preparation. Nowadays that has changed with a number of governments having set up their own training courses for experts in 'post-war peace-building' as it is mostly called.

³⁴⁹ The structure of these courses at that time was a basic course of about 6-7 weeks, 3 weeks of internship, followed by another 2 weeks of the basic course, and then 2 weeks of 'specialisation' in topics like monitoring, mediation, building civil society, project management and others more. The basic courses covered topics like conflict analysis, working in a team, gender, peace building, nonviolence and dealing with trauma (see Wagner 2000, Knittel and Monsef 2001).

³⁵⁰ In Britain, Responding to Conflict in Woodbrooke offered 3 month courses once a year since 1991 that are mostly directed at people coming from conflict areas but also had participants who would qualify as external actors. In Austria, there have been since 1993 four-week International Peacekeeping Courses with mixed participants (both state and non-state) at the Austrian Study Center for Peace and Conflict Resolution Stadtschlaining (see Schweitzer et al 2001, chapter 5).

both contents-wise with the growing experience of what is of practical use, and number-wise with many new organisations world-wide engaging in comparable trainings.³⁵¹ Unfortunately this would go beyond the period and topic under study here.

8.3 Protest and Advocacy: The Issues They Addressed

This and the following section 8.4 are turning to the third type of activity that addresses other actors rather than intervening directly into the conflicts: protest and advocacy. A lively public debate was one of the most striking elements of the whole period of the wars in former Yugoslavia. We can identify three main periods: between 1991 and 1995 (up to the Dayton and Erdut agreements), the Kosovo crisis and war of 1998–1999 and the Macedonia conflict in 2001.

Mostly this protest was directed against other intervening actors. While there were no mass demonstrations on the scale of the 1991 protests against the first Iraq war, it is important to acknowledge that there were groups holding vigils and protests in front of embassies of ex-Yugoslav countries, or writing appeals and statements and faxing or mailing them to the actors in question.³⁵² Some groups even went beyond that and chose methods of civil disobedience to make their points. For example a small group of activists from the mentioned Gesellschaft fuer bedroehnte Volker that became increasingly critical of Croatia's involvement in the war in Bosnia, and so in 1993 'occupied' the Croatian Embassy in Berlin for one day and one night in protest (Donat 1993).

Rather than giving a chronological account of the period under study, the following description focuses on the topics and problems around which protest and advocacy developed. Some of the issues only came up at certain moments, while others came up more than once, or continued throughout the period. The section after that then will look at the main instruments used.

³⁵¹ For example Peaceworkers UK, Mouvement pour une alternative non-violente in France, Training for Change in the USA, Patrîr in Rumania, EPU Stadtschlaining in Austria (see ARCA 2008).

³⁵² See the different minutes of the Ex-Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis for mention of such actions in Germany, and Le Meut 1998 for one in France.

8.3.1 The Break-up of Yugoslavia and the Interpretation of the Conflicts

8.3.1.1 Early Interest in Yugoslavia

Before summer 1991, Yugoslavia was not on the agenda of many civil society groups. In the survey I found only two kinds of organisations that dealt with Yugoslavia and the growing tensions between its republics: One was international umbrella organisations that had members from the region like the already mentioned War Resisters' International (WRI). WRI and the publication related to it, Peace News, started to report and warn of a possible violent crisis in 1990, but with the focus on seeking nonviolent alternatives and nonviolent defence in support of the movement, not speaking up against the secession (see War Resisters' International 1991b, 1994 and 1998).

The other type was organisations that because of their mission and objectives were close to the issue. 'Friendship' organisations including migrants from Yugoslavia and members of the different host countries belonging to them, but also NGOs interested in ethnic and cultural minorities. One example is the German Gesellschaft fuer bedrohte Voelker (Society for Threatened People-GfbV).³⁵³ They supported the secession movements as ethnic groups seeking self-determination. In their eyes Yugoslavia had been an artificial construction that came to life only because of World War I and II (see Zuelich 1990).³⁵⁴

8.3.1.2 Different Positions Towards the Break-up of Yugoslavia

In 1991, and retrospectively in later discussions, there have been different positions towards the break-up of Yugoslavia in international civil society:

- Groups and organisations and media supporting the secession (like the GfbV), or arguing that there was no other choice given 'the threat of genocide' as whose

³⁵³ The GfbV was founded in 1970 by has its headquarters in Germany, with branches today in some other countries (Austria, Switzerland, South Tyrol/Italy, Luxemburg, Bosnia-Herzegovina and Chile.)

³⁵⁴ During the wars, they compared the European politics with the 'appeasement' policy in 1938 that "levelled the road for Word War II and Auschwitz", and demanded among other things a complete blockade of the borders of Serbia-Montenegro to Bosnia and Croatia, to secure militarily humanitarian aid and protection of people in the enclaves, an international tribunal for war crimes and to lift the arms embargo "against the legal Bosnian government troops", as well as protesting against a possible division of Bosnia (Geismar 1994, Rohder 1993).

perpetrators they saw ‘the Serbs’ (see Kent 2006:6).

- Groups that took a non-partisan view, emphasising the need for minority rights to be respected and the process to happen non-violently. Examples are the French Mouvement pour une alternative non-violente (MAN) or the German Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung (see Nonviolence Actualité 1993a, Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung 1992, 1993, n.d.-a and n.d.-c).
- Groups and media that harshly criticised the break-up that many of them saw as being engineered by Germany and/or the EC as a whole. These latter voices became stronger over the years, and the theme of ‘socialist Yugoslavia being torn apart by the West’ is still a virulent topic in parts of the peace movement (see for example Hartmann 1999:43pp and the sources quoted below in the section on the Kosovo war).³⁵⁵

8.3.1.3 Partition of Bosnia-Herzegovina

A related but still separate issue in this context has been the discussion that took place during the war of 1992-95 on the future of Bosnia-Herzegovina. Especially the Helsinki Citizens’ Assembly (see chapter 5) was very engaged in demanding that Bosnia must not be divided on ethnic lines, speaking up against nationalism and attempts to divide the country through the different peace plans provided by the international community (Kaldor and Faber 1993, Kaldor 1994, Helsinki Citizens’ Assembly 1995). Instead, they suggested a protectorate for Bosnia (‘UN Transitional Authority’) based on an agreement by the warring parties long before the Contact Group started drafting its peace plan.

³⁵⁵ As a variant of this can be seen those groups and media (though numerically - irrelevant) that put the blame for the wars on the Croatian and Bosnian government. Kent summarises this position nicely for the British media until the mid 90s:

...the wars were seen as a pre-emptive assault by Serbian forces against first, a genocidal Croatian fascist government, then against a fundamentalist Muslim government intent on genocide against Serbs in Bosnia (Kent 2006:6).

8.3.2 Human Rights Violations and Prosecution of War Crimes

The issue of human rights violations and especially the mass rapes of Bosnian women that became known in late 1992 was one of the earliest topics for campaigning.³⁵⁶ Demands expressed were

- that raped women should be treated like male war victims in regard to reparations and compensation (see Ott 1992);
- that rape should be included in the list of war crimes, and perpetrators prosecuted by an international tribunal (see Wullweber 1993, Donnard 1994, Large n.d.:70);³⁵⁷
- that persecution because of gender was recognised as sufficient grounds for the granting of asylum (Die GRUENEN Bundesverband et al 1992, Internationale Fraueninitiative gegen die Gewalt an Frauen 1993, Frauen helfen Frauen n.d.).

Another special human rights issue was the right for conscientious objection and the protection of objectors, deserters and people who otherwise evaded military service. In the last chapter it has already been described that there was a grassroots' network of like-minded groups, mostly related to War Resisters' International that helped these people to hide, escape from the country that sought to draft them and supported them during their stay as refugees in third countries (see above 7.1.2.2). There were also activities of protest and advocacy on this issue. For example, in 1992 the European Civic Forum, an international organisation with members from East and West Europe collected signatures for a draft decision improving the juridical situation of deserters from armies of the former Yugoslavia, to be presented to the European Parliament.³⁵⁸ This collection of signatures took place in 16 countries. It probably was a factor in the positive decision of the European Parliament on 28 October 1993 in support of deserters (Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1994, Europäisches Parlament 1995, Jakobi-Schwan 1996:193).

³⁵⁶ As described in the last chapter, another reaction especially of women's groups was to go to Croatia and Bosnia first for fact finding, and then setting up projects of practical aid for the victims (Medica, Vive Zene etc, see Agger et al 1999).

³⁵⁷ This demand was also made in regard to human rights violations in general. Many organisations petitioned governments and UN in the early months of the Bosnian war to create an international tribunal to persecute these crimes (see for example Minnesota Coalition 1994).

³⁵⁸ The European Civic Forum was founded in 1989 mainly by members of the European Cooperative Longo Mai.

8.3.3 Acceptance of Refugees by Third Countries

Another campaigning issue was for the right of displaced people to flee to third countries outside the region. One example would be an appeal by the National Peace Council in the UK submitted to the Minister of Overseas Development on 28 July 1992:

Following reports in the press about the extent of the exodus of refugees from various regions of the republics of former Yugoslavia..., we are writing to lend support to the actions the British Government has taken to date in its contributions to the relief effort... .

At the same time we feel moved to say: could we not be doing more to help these desperate people... we appeal to you to reconsider the scale of our help to the victims of this bitter conflict... Surely it is now time for the UK, and other countries throughout Europe, to take responsibility for a tragic situation we can no longer avoid and reconsider suggestions for a quota system to enable the burdens consequent on this evil war to be more evenly shared. (National Peace Council 1992d)

This appeal stands for dozens if not hundreds of similar ones that were produced and published by many civil society organisations, for example by the above-mentioned Gesellschaft fuer bedrohte Voelker that campaigned for special status for war refugees (Hermes 1995), as did the French Mouvement pour une alternative non-violente (Carlen 1994, Le Meut 1995a).

8.3.4 Solidarity with Kosovo – the International Activities

A fourth issue addressed by civil society throughout most the 1990s was the nonviolent movement in Kosovo. In the last chapter already some solidarity activities that took place within Kosovo were described.³⁵⁹ The majority of these actions, however, took place not in Kosovo but abroad, addressing and appealing in particular to the Western European and the US governments to pay attention to Kosovo. In the ³⁵⁹ There have been solidarity activities not only with Kosovo but with a variety of groups and movements in the former Yugoslavia, and not only with peace-minded and anti-nationalist groups. While protest that supported the different governments in the region was probably mostly led by diaspora groups, there have always also been people of non-Ex-Yugoslavia nationality been with these groups and joining their struggle (see as example the German-Croat Friendship Society described by Zuelich 1990).

following I would like to give a few examples for protest and advocacy in this context:

A Swiss group, a local branch of the Helsinki Citizens Assembly from Geneva, proposed in January 1993 a twinning between Geneva and Prishtina. They argued that the situation in Kosovo was explosive, human rights violated and the Albanian majority deprived of its rights, and suggested an international monitoring mission of INGOs to “support and protect the democratic and pacifist organisations in Kosovo, and alert international opinion in the event of provocation or threats” (Solioz 1993). Their suggestion was not an official twinning between Geneva and Prishtina, since Geneva as host of international conferences has a policy of neutrality, but a ‘civil society twinning’ involving the establishment of a ‘House for Peace, Human Rights and Reconciliation’ in Prishtina that could be supported by citizens associations in Geneva.³⁶⁰

The French Mouvement pour une alternative non-violente was interested in the civil resistance in Kosovo from 1992 onwards.³⁶¹ In the next years they conducted some visits, and in their articles in NVA asked for solidarity with Kosovo (de Villeneuve 1993, Le Meut 1996, Nonviolence Actualité 1995b), as in the following example:

The only solution today will be to initiate a process of decolonization with a guarantee of the right for self-determination for the Kosovars. This process could be guaranteed by an international nonviolent interposition force that would be composed mostly with members of NGOs.

First it is important to make the situation down there known, to inform the people and to appeal to the political decision-makers. The nonviolent resistance of Kosovo deserves an active support of the French and international public opinion (de Villeneuve 1993:5, translation CS).

They continued their work on Kosovo after the end of the Bosnia war. For example, in 1997 they campaigned for the Nobel Prize for Peace to be awarded to Kosovo’s President Rugova (‘Le Prix Nobel de la Paix 1996 pour Ibrahim Rugova’ 1997, Glorieux 1998).

In early 1998, they and some Italian organisations discussed how to support the maintenance of the civilian resistance (Glorieux 1998), and welcomed the OSCE

³⁶⁰ In the following years, HCA Geneva became also a member organisation of the Balkan Peace Team, and continued their campaign for human and civic rights in Kosovo (see Schweitzer and Clark 2002).

³⁶¹ At least that is the date it is first mentioned in the magazine Nonviolence Actualité (NVA) related to them (Le Meut 1992)

Kosovo Verification Mission which at least one of their activists also joined as a monitor (Le Meut 1998). During the Kosovo/Yugoslavia war, they protested the NATO bombing, but generally welcomed that the Serbian rule over Kosovo was broken (Carlen and Duchesne 1999).

8.3.5 Pro and Contra Military Intervention

One of the hottest controversies has concerned the use of military means to end the wars. This discussion began with the question of military intervention in Bosnia-Herzegovina, and became an outright protest movement when NATO decided to attack FR Yugoslavia in 1999. During the violence in Macedonia in 2001 and the response by NATO, protest came up again but because of the quick peaceful settlement of the developing civil war never went beyond statements of concern. The following section therefore will focus solely on the wars in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Kosovo.

8.3.5.1 For and Against Military Intervention in Bosnia-Herzegovina

With the realization that the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina would not end as quickly as the earlier conflicts in Slovenia and Croatia, and in the face of growing numbers of reports of atrocities and of the situation in beleaguered Sarajevo, many voices started to make themselves heard demanding a more decisive military commitment from the international community and/or at least lifting of the arms embargo against the Bosnian government.³⁶² An example for such military action had just been set with the second Gulf War in 1991 where the UN and the Western countries had not hesitated to go to war to 'liberate Kuwait' and 'restore international law'. The feeling of 'something must be done', 'we cannot just continue to watch' was not only the dominant message of almost all mass media in that time, but was also reflected in the demands and positions of many civil society groups.

³⁶² Chapter 4.1.3 and 4.2 describe how the military engagement of the international community slowly increased between 1992 and 1995, starting out with a peace-keeping mission with a purely humanitarian mandate and monitoring of the arms' embargo, and ending with a bombing campaign on Serb positions in Bosnia in 1995.

These demands for more military engagement cannot be identified with any particular political spectrum but tended to come from groups and political parties throughout the right-left-spectrum, including those from the peace, human rights and ecological movements. For example, the Helsinki Citizens' Assembly - that was introduced in chapter 5 - campaigned continuously for more military engagement of the western world (UN, NATO and European Union) to protect the UN-declared safe areas through a strengthened military engagement (see Kaldor 1994, Helsinki Citizens' Assembly 1995).³⁶³ Many international peace organisations struggled very hard to find positions, sometimes the internal conflict between those who could imagine a military intervention and those who could not led to serious splits in organisations (see Schnettler, Wiese and Koerber 1995).

Some other peace organisations, however, retained a strict anti-militarist/pacifist position. For example, in 1992 War Resisters' International and the International Fellowship of Reconciliation issued an open letter which I would like to quote in some length because it contains two points of the pacifist argument that was used by many groups: the danger of a military escalation caused by military intervention, and ulterior motives pursued by the international community when propagating military intervention.

Since the war spread to Bosnia-Herzegovina, there have been widespread calls for military intervention, even in letters from the anti-war movement in Sarajevo. The Bosnian government have pleaded for military intervention under the auspices of anybody willing to mount such an intervention and with goals ranging from escorting relief convoys or opening Sarajevo airport to disarming the former JNA and the paramilitaries...

Any use of military force -- no matter how limited it is intended to be -- introduces a different logic, a military logic offering a rationale for further, less limited use of additional military force...

³⁶³ The demand for military intervention was also raised by the majority of the anti-war, women's and human rights groups in the former Yugoslavia – those groups that were the primary partners of the international civil society. In an open letter of anti-war groups to the international peace movement issued in April 1994 this disagreement was addressed. The signatories, activists from Slovenia, Croatia, Montenegro, Macedonia, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Serbia and Kosovo, expressed their concern 'that peace groups in Europe spoke up chiefly for nonviolence. The state of Bosnia-Herzegovina had to be defended with all means available'. (Offener Brief an die Friedensbewegungen 1996).

The other points in this letter were about the need for international support for their work, but that such support needed to come from groups being well-informed about the situation, criticizing mass actions like the HCA peace caravan or Mir Sada, and listing some specific common concerns like neofascism, need for support of war resisters, etc.

What begins with a small action - e.g. to secure the area around Sarajevo airport -- might, if the Western troops get involved in heavy fighting, become a major military intervention with tens of thousands of soldiers and much heavier arms than those currently used in former Yugoslavia...

Every decision to use military force strengthens the general argument in favour of the military-based so-called "New World Order".

Since the end of the old East-West conflict, politicians and the military from Western countries are looking for new roles for their forces. Not only the JNA, but they too are fighting for their survival as an institution (War Resisters' International and International Fellowship of Reconciliation 1992).

A third standard argument is missing in this statement which was often added to the other two points: the argument that not all other means had been exhausted, and that there were alternatives to military intervention. The reference to 'alternatives' meant more or less everything that civil society undertook on the ground in the conflict zones, from training in conflict resolution and mediation through practical solidarity work with anti-war groups in the region to much unconventional work with refugees and in reconstruction as it was described in chapter 7.³⁶⁴

Similar discussions - in Germany called the 'pacifism debate' - happened in most if not all European countries and North America, although of course the discourse and the influence of the different positions differed from country to country.³⁶⁵ For ³⁶⁴ As an example I would like to cite the German Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung. It worked from 1991 onwards intensively on the conflicts of former Yugoslavia. An undated overview from c. 1993 lists as activities:

- Sending trainers for mediation and nonviolent conflict resolution to Zagreb, Osijek, Belgrade and Pancevo;
- Building up an electronic Mailbox network;
- Started research project to evaluate programmes of nonviolent conflict resolution;
- Participated in different international projects and conferences, for example Peace Island Vis, Peace Caravan, conferences of HCA, Verona-Forum;
- Supported partnerships between peace groups in Germany and former Yugoslavia;
- Joined the Solidarity for Peace Caravan to Sarajevo (Beati i costruttori di pace);
- Made an appeal asking people to accept a refugee or a family in their home;
- Initiated regularly meeting Coordination of all groups working on Yugoslavia;
- Members and staff of BSV give several times a week presentations and seminars talking about former Yugoslavia (Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung n.d.-c).

³⁶⁵ This debate has been and still is a mostly ethical one, drawing often on the Christian 'just law' concept (see Becker-Hinrichs 1999, Haensel and Stobbe 2002, Tenbergen 2000).

Another standard argument were comparisons to Germany under the Nazis and World War II. During the Bosnia war, especially in 1994-95 when the inner centres of Sarajevo and Tuzla were hit by grenades and the Eastern Bosnian protected areas attacked, President Milosevic was compared with Hitler like 1991 President Hussein. Europe's politics in Bosnia got compared with example German peace movement groups were also very critical of UN peace-keeping.³⁶⁶ In France and in Italy, there was much more support for UN Blue Helmets. The line here was rather drawn between Blue Helmets on the one side, and NATO bombing on the other (Dufour 1994, Muller 1994).

8.3.5.2 The NATO War on FR Yugoslavia

The readiness of NATO to militarily intervene in the Kosovo conflict in autumn 1998 (the activation order), and then their attack on the FR Yugoslavia after the failure of the Rambouillet negotiations in March 1999 saw a more unanimous protest than the military interventions into the Bosnian war, probably because of several reasons coming together: First, in spite of the reports in 1998 on the numbers of displaced in Kosovo, there was not such a strong public pressure created of ‘something must be done’ as had been the case in relation to Bosnia. Second, there was no UN decision covering the attack by NATO which made it illegal from the point of view of international law, something that was pointed out by international lawyers already before the beginning of the war (see Haensel and Stobbe 2002:86pp). Third, the war lasted for months, and the more pictures and reports came out of air raids on Serbian towns and civilians falling victim to the attacks, the stronger the criticism grew. Fourth, NATO was already ‘the bad guy’ in the eyes of most in the peace and related movements. And finally, even many those who felt that a military intervention was necessary were unhappy with NATO because no ground troops were sent in to protect the Kosovo Albanians on the ground, leaving them to the mercy of the Serbian troops.

the Appeasement politics of 1938 (see Czempel 1995). One sentence often heard in Germany was that ‘no more war’ was not having priority over ‘never again Auschwitz’ (Fischer 1999). But ‘nazifying’ the Serbs was a phenomenon not only in Germany but in other European countries and the US as well, for example by free use of the terms ‘holocaust’, ‘genocide’ and ‘concentration camps’. “The most effective way to demonise anybody today is to link them somehow to the Nazi experience” states Hume (2000:71) with some cause.

The ‘pacifism debate’ that had started with the second Iraq war even before the conflicts in former Yugoslavia gave it much speed, did however not end with the Bosnian war but was continued, becoming very lively again during the Kosovo war (see Haensel and Stobbe 2002). A good summary for the German discussion during the Iraq time can be found in Narr and Vack 1991. An example for the continuation after 2001 is Volmer 2002.

³⁶⁶ The reason probably was an ongoing campaign against a change of the German constitution that would allow Germany to deploy troops outside of NATO area.

This does not mean that there was no support for the war in international civil society including parts of the peace movement.³⁶⁷ One good example is the ‘Hague Appeal for Peace’: In May 1999, during the Yugoslavia/Kosovo war, a long-planned large international peace conference with this title took place in The Hague to commemorate the original Hague Peace Conference that took place one hundred years before (see Hague Appeal for Peace n.d.).³⁶⁸ Ten thousand peace activists from all over the world came together, and Kosovo was one of the main topics. Its 23-page final appeal includes two paragraphs that are of relevance in this context here because it documents how the majority of the participants viewed the wars in Bosnia and Kosovo and the role of the international community in them: It speaks of “recent outbreaks of genocide”, listing Bosnia and Kosovo alongside Rwanda and Cambodia, and among many other points demands the speedy and effective intervention of humanitarian forces, subject to the prescriptions of the UN Charter, when civilians are threatened by genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and extreme national disasters (Hague Appeal for Peace 1999:5).

Those who condemned NATO’s attack were divided among themselves. The main contested point was the positioning to the struggle of the Kosovo-Albanians for independence.³⁶⁹ One side criticised the NATO attack but supported its eventual outcome, Kosovo being made an international protectorate. “For sure, the war declared on Serbia defends a just cause. But it does not suffice that a cause is just for a war to be just” wrote a well-known nonviolent activist and researcher, Jean-Marie Muller in early 1999 (Muller 1999b).

The other position perhaps most predominantly represented with some or many those on the political left displayed no understanding or sympathy for the cause of the Kosovo Albanians whom they sometimes just titled ‘terrorists’, and implicitly denied the oppression that took place in Kosovo in the 1990s as well as the presumed threat of genocide.³⁷⁰ Instead, they accused the West (USA and Europe) to have wilfully split Yugoslavia that they saw as one of the last resorts of socialism in Europe (see Chossudovsky 2006, one of the spokespersons of this position).

³⁶⁷ The discussion on just war and legitimization of the war because of the assumed ethnic cleansing planned by Belgrade played a role in the big churches and again – like in Bosnia – was more prominently represented by the (moderate – Social Democrat) left and Green parties (see Refalo 1999, Haensel and Stobbe 2002:56) than with the conservative Right.

³⁶⁸ It was initiated by the International Peace Bureau (IPB), the International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War (IPPNW), the International Association of Lawyers Against Nuclear Arms (IALANA), and the World Federalist Movement.

³⁶⁹ And still is, see for example the articles on the webpage of the Kasseler Friedensratschlag 2008 referring to Kosovo or its recognition as an independent country in early 2008.

8.4 The Main Instruments of Protest and Advocacy

In this following section I am leaving the particular issues around which protest and advocacy developed in the period under study, and turn to the forms this protest took: its instruments. To give a taste of the complexity of the activities, I would like to start this section with a quote. It is from a leader of a women's peace network organisation from the beginning of the Kosovo and Yugoslavia war 1999, and in my eyes is typical for the protest and advocacy activities in the European peace movements:

At the beginning there were individual telephone calls, then telefaxes and appeals piled up with the request to pass them on, to collect signatures, to write lobbying letters, to keep contact with the groups and organizations of the network. Then came requests to support demonstrations in Bonn,...Erfurt, Berlin. Then the pressure to participate in the daily vigil here in Bonn, to contact other women organizations..., to send around materials appeals by ourselves,... Finally there was the invitation to speak on the Erfurt congress of the Mothers Against the War.

There was need to deal fully with the political level: Letters to the Chancellor, the Foreign Minister, the Minister of Defence, then the heads of the party fractions in Parliament, finally all MPs, as well as support letters for those MPs who had publicly declared their position against the war of attack of NATO. There was need to maintain contacts to the NGO scene and not to ignore citizens who were aghast..." (Frauen Netzwerk fuer Frieden 1999:3).

8.4.1 Instruments of Protest

8.4.1.1 Appeals

The most common activities of protest have been appeals, open letters and/or press releases.³⁷¹ They were printed in the publications of the organisations issuing them, ³⁷⁰ How dominant that view was and is varies from country to country. For example, in Britain it seems to be more marginal than it is in Germany (information by Andrew Rigby on Britain; for Germany see the webpages of the Kasseler Friedensratschlag 2008).

faxed to the media, put on e-mail lists or later in the 1990s on websites in the internet, and/ or distributed as leaflets on the streets or at conferences. Generally, probably the following categories could be distinguished:

- Appeals “to end the war”, directed vaguely both to the international community and / or to the local actors.
- Appeals demanding specific certain action like granting asylum to objectors and deserters from former Yugoslav countries or creating safe havens in Bosnia-Herzegovina.³⁷²
- Declarations primarily intended to express a position or a concern, for example support for or condemnation of an act.³⁷³

The main functions of these instruments have been to express an opinion divergent of what the governments or the mass media subscribed to, and to suggest certain action the state actors should take. Besides that, they also had of course a function within their own constituency, contributing to the shaping of the opinion within it – and sometimes fighting over certain issues (see the ‘pacifism debate’ described above).

8.4.1.2 Public Events

Many NGOs and citizens groups organised evenings on the conflict in former Yugoslavia in general or certain aspects like “nonviolent alternatives”, “situation of COs” or the like. Sometimes there was just one speaker of the organizing group, sometimes there were panels with either speakers with contesting views, or shedding ³⁷¹ Some of the appeals and open letters were signed by many people. The collection of signatures was a means used by groups in order to emphasise the public support their respective demands had.

³⁷² For example conducted the Helsinki Citizens’ Assembly in 1992/93 a postcard campaign all over Europe and North America demanding safe havens in Bosnia-Herzegovina, and open borders for refugees. This campaign that according to the HCA was an idea of UN special envoy Tadeusz Mazowiecki had a response of nearly 300,000 postcards. The organisers attributed the decision of the UN to create safe areas to their initiative though deploring that they were “reservations for Muslims” and not what they had wanted (Faber 1993, Kaldor and Faber 1993).

³⁷³ There are numerous such declarations by the Catholic Church collected in Buchbender and Arnold (eds.) 2002:77-183.

light on different aspects of a topic. There have also been a number of invitations of speakers from the former Yugoslavia to speaking events and conferences abroad.³⁷⁴

There have been also many conferences on the situation or aspects of it in European countries.³⁷⁵ Sometimes they targeted local or national public, sometimes international impact was intended, for example by connecting conferences to 'official events'. For example, in August 1992 the Institute for War and Peace Reporting and the British American Security Information Council invited leading opposition and minority leaders for a simultaneous alternative Conference to the London Conference ('Citizens' Movements. Alternative Paths to Peace' 1992).

A somewhat special event - both regarding its size and the calibre of people involved - has been the 'International Tribunal on the NATO-war against Yugoslavia' taking place parallel as two events in the USA and in Germany in 2000. That Tribunal was organised and supported by a large number of organisations of different political orientation (nonviolent, women's, leftist groups, as well as grassroots' peace initiatives), with the US International Action Centre led by former US Attorney-General Ramsey Clark who also wrote the 'bill of indictment' as its initiator (see 'Internationales Europaeisches Tribunal ueber den NATO-Krieg gegen Jugoslawien' 2000, Kasseler Friedensratschlag 2000). A number of smaller conferences prepared the tribunals that accused NATO and the government leaders of those countries most actively involved in the attack on the FR Yugoslavia of breaking international law.³⁷⁶

³⁷⁴ Several initiatives created photo exhibitions and showed them during evening events. This was not limited to larger organisations (for example the development organisation Christian Peace Service, that did an exhibition on children refugees, see CFD 1993) but also done by small local groups (Ex-Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis 1993).

There were also other related activities like presentations in schools. For example, the Italian humanitarian NGO INTERSOS worked in schools in Rome, informing on "The Children and the War", and in November 1999 on refugees from Kosovo (Tullio and Vertucci 2002:214-215).

³⁷⁵ As conferences (in contrast to information evenings) are counted events that had more than one speaker, and lasted at least one day.

³⁷⁶ The list of 19 grievances starts with "Planning and Executing the Dismemberment, Segregation and Impoverishment of Yugoslavia", includes concrete actions during the war ("Destroying and Damaging Economic, Social, Cultural, Medical, Diplomatic and Religious Resources, Properties and Facilities throughout Yugoslavia" and ends with "The Purpose of the US Actions Being to Dominate, Control and Exploit Yugoslavia, Its People and Its Resources. The Means of the US Being Military Power and Economic Coercion" (Kasseler Friedensratschlag 2000). Under "Relief Sought" the initiators suggested among other points the formation of a federation of all peoples in the region, the "strict prohibition on all forms of foreign interference with or disruption of efforts to establish unity, peace and stability in the Balkans", the abolition of NATO and of the "illegal ad hoc international criminal tribunal for Yugoslavia" and the removal of all foreign troops from the Balkans.

The functions of these diverse public events have been different ones:

- Addressing a wider public for information-sharing (information evenings for example)
- Forming opinion within the own constituency (panels and conferences where speakers with different opinions were given a voice)
- Addressing the state actors, expressing protest or trying to otherwise influence them (conferences with participation of such actors, or with wider media coverage like the mentioned 'tribunal').

8.4.1.3 Demonstrations

One of the standard accusations against the peace movement during the time of the Bosnian war was that they did not hold demonstrations against the war. This observation which was shared by many – including activists in the peace movements themselves – is certainly correct, if leaving aside the traditional annual events that addressed aspects of the wars in former Yugoslavia, mostly the military engagement of the Western countries in them (see Friedensforum 1994). The numbers of participants however before 1999 did not come close to the numbers of the protests against the Iraq war of 1991 or the best times of the peace movements in the 1980s.

Andreas Buro, a long-term civil rights and peace activist and retired professor for political science wrote in an early article on this question:

But against what should we demonstrate here in Germany? The federal government and the EC have so far worked for a mitigation of the conflict with non-military means, though not always in the way we would have wanted them to do ,... In reality the peace movement has a new task for which it is little prepared: How can solidarity that transcends borders be organised in Europe? (Buro 1992:26, translation CS).

More typical than larger demonstrations have been vigils or small demonstrations with perhaps less than 50 participants that have been conducted by many groups of different orientation (not only peace movement but also immigrant groups with their supporters and others).

The picture changed during the Yugoslavia/Kosovo war when in many countries large demonstrations were held against the NATO attack with several thousand participants each (see Friedensnetz Baden-Wuerttemberg 1999, Moore 1999, Netzwerk Friedenskooperative 1999a, Pinter 1999, Spinnerets 1999).

8.4.1.4 Legal Means

Several attempts have been made to use legal means against the NATO war on FR Yugoslavia, in order to force the international community to stop the war or at least to seek redress afterwards, but all remained without success.³⁷⁷ One example would be a complaint to ICTY by the American Association of Jurists together with jurists from Toronto. The Tribunal quickly rejected the complaint together with similar received from the FR Yugoslavia and a Russian Parliamentary Commission, feeling compelled to announce the rejection in a press release but without really giving any reasons (International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia 2000, see also Pinter 2000).³⁷⁸

8.4.1.5 Other Public Actions

Aside from demonstrations, there have been other public actions over the decade. Again, it is only possible to name a few examples from a large amount of data collected on the civil society actors:

- Peace prayers (see the different minutes of the German (Ex-)Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis from the early 1990s),
- Symbolic actions. The GFbV for example planted in 1995 a ‘cemetery’ with wooden crosses remembering the fall of Srebrenica and Zepa close to Chancellor Kohl’s private home, demanding the lifting of the arms embargo (Martin 1995).
- Fasts and hunger strikes: For example, there was a hunger strike of five artists in ³⁷⁷ This is not a very common tool, but one that in some other cases has been used successfully, the most famous perhaps being the arrest of the former Chilean dictator Pinochet in London because Spain had filed a suit against him.

³⁷⁸ Two other examples have been the following:

In the US, 31 congresspeople filed a lawsuit against President Clinton seeking an end to military strikes against Yugoslavia. The court rejected this motion as well as FR Yugoslavia’s seeking a legal order to halt the NATO Bombing at the International Court of Justice (Simons 1999).

In Germany five family members of civilian victims in the small town Varvarin went to court asking for compensation, but the court rejected their complaint (Kasseler Friedensratschlag 2003).

solidarity with Bosnia in France in August 1995. They referred to the ‘Avignon declaration’ signed by thousands of people at a festival of Avignon that demanded the resignation of Boutros-Ghali for incompetence, immediate action by the Hague Tribunal against the perpetrators of Srebrenica, the continued presence of the Blue Helmets in Bosnia, keeping up the international pressure against Serbia, “defence of the democratic Bosnia-Herzegovina”, and the lifting of the arms embargo (Nonviolence Actualité 1995a).³⁷⁹

- Very few actions of civil disobedience were directed at representatives of the conflict parties except the ‘smuggling’ of refugees from the war areas into third countries (chapter 7.1.2.2). One was a nonviolent blockade of a British Air Basis in Germany (Brueggen close to Moenchengladbach) on the 18 April 1999.

8.4.2 Instruments of Advocacy Work

There is an overlap between this work and what has been described under ‘middle level’ approaches in the chapter on civil society peace-making (see 5.2). If the activity in question clearly had local actors as a main target group, then I categorised it as ‘peace-making’. If – as far as I could discern from the sources – the main target group were other internationals, I put it here under advocacy. However, there is a grey area because people from the region participated in some of the advocacy activities as well.

8.4.2.1 Advocating and Lobbying For Political Options

The International Crisis Group (ICG), a private high level advocacy organisation founded by former diplomats and politicians, and having quite some influence in political circles, is a good example for advocacy work.³⁸⁰ I am not aware of any study of the impact their recommendations to the international community had in general, but there are indicators that at least some of their reports on Bosnia wielded ³⁷⁹ In 1999, several people conducted a fast between middle of May and beginning of June in Paris, “to appeal to the responsible politicians and as witness for peace in justice”. It was an action supported by many groups, among them MAN, Arche de Lanza del Vasto, Cun de Larzac, Church and Peace, Quakers, IFOR and others (Nonviolence Actualité 1999b).

³⁸⁰ In the bibliography there is a list of most of their publications concerning the former Yugoslavia.

influence: One was their critique of the Bosnian electoral system which according to Gagnon (1998:11) led the UN to reform the system to make an election of moderates more likely (International Crisis Group 1997b). Destexhe (2001) names the ICG report on Brcko (1999a) as a second report having been influential.³⁸¹

Other organizations, for example human rights organisations like the International Helsinki Federation for Human Rights and the US-based Human Rights Watch, did not address peace-making in general but advocated for attention to human rights issues (see Troebst 1998:93pp) in general.³⁸²

Advocacy work has, of course, not been limited to those established organisations. Also new groups and organisations got involved in this type of work. One example would be the (already cited) Verona Forum (see chapter 5.2.2.1) that also engaged in lobbying as a direct outcome of its work among representatives from the different countries of former Yugoslavia.³⁸³

8.4.2.2 Institutionalizing 'Civilian Alternatives'

Very successful advocacy has taken place around the issue of civilian alternatives, though the issue in question here was not specific action on the conflicts in former Yugoslavia but the establishment of institutions and state funding supporting NGO's working on conflict. This is probably the only case that could be considered a real success story in the field of protest and advocacy:

In Europe and North America, it was in the 1990s that the discussion on civil conflict resolution grew exponentially (Paffenholz 2001b, Weller 2007). The conflicts in the former Yugoslavia were not the only international conflict triggering interest on how to solve or settle international conflicts – the 2nd Iraq war, Somalia, Rwanda were ³⁸¹ Other examples for advocacy work would be the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace that made suggestions regarding Kosovo (Troebst 1998:91pp) and the European Stability Initiative (ESI, European Stability Initiative 2001, 2007) that wrote a number of expert reports on different issues. ESI is a non-profit research and policy institute, founded in 1999 by an international group of practitioners and experts, funded mostly by government and corporation grants. Its goal is to provide policy makers with analysis, and is claiming to have had "a substantial impact on international policy towards South Eastern Europe. Its advice was sought regularly by a range of policy makers across the region." (European Stability Initiative n.d.).

³⁸² Baglioni 2001 distinguishes this type of work from that of advocacy groups but I would argue that it is advocacy as well, only on a more specific topic.

³⁸³ It established a permanent coordination and communication at the European Parliament in Brussels for that purpose.

other key events in this decade. But there can be no doubt that Yugoslavia played an essential role in the debate both for the formulation of the need, and for examples on what kind of work could be envisaged.³⁸⁴ What was new in the 1990s has been that the scope of interest was broadened from peace-making (mediation, negotiation) to more encompassing approaches, and people searched for different tools to deal with conflict without violence. One focus of these alternatives has been the sending of civilians to conflict areas to support peace processes (see Schirch 1995). The reasons for the popularity of this approach were probably two factors – the formal resemblance to the sending of the military (‘send civilians instead of soldiers’), and that it allowed a comparatively easy and direct access to work on the conflicts – easier than for example trying to influence the high-level leadership.

Under the heading of ‘Civil Peace Service’ Europe-wide initiatives first in Germany and some years later also in the Netherlands, Austria, Switzerland, France and Italy sought to establish a new type of service situated somewhere between the older volunteer services for youth, alternative service to military service, the work of established development organisations and peace teams (see Truger 1996, Centro Studi Difesa Civile 1998, Balkan Peace Team 2000, Trittman 2000, Schweitzer et al 2001, War Resisters’ International 2004a).

The initiatives in the different countries varied a lot, with some working on training alone (Netherlands), others finding a niche for volunteer services in the context of the abolition of military draft in their country (France, Italy), and in Germany an ‘expert service’ was established comparable to the established development cooperation services, only focussed on dealing with conflict. The German example is well documented, and therefore I would like to describe it as an example of the complexity of successful advocacy work that managed to convince a government to institutionalize a new instrument and budget line that exclusively focuses on conflict resolution work:

The development of a Civil Peace Service in Germany started in 1991 with a declaration and subsequent work of the Protestant Church of Berlin-Brandenburg ³⁸⁴ See the two conferences on “Peaceful Settlement of Conflict” at the Protestant Academy of Loccum in 1993 and 1994 (Calließ and Merkel (eds.) 1993 and 1994), and Weller 2007 for the history of the discussion in Germany. Some early overviews on ‘civil conflict resolution’ methods were published by Diamond and McDonald 1993, Ropers 1995, Ropers and Debiel (eds.) 1995, Rupesinghe 1995, Ryan 1995.

(see Evangelische Kirche in Berlin-Brandenburg 1991). The above-mentioned Federation for Social Defence took up the concept and until 1994 developed its own version of it, gathering together a diverse group of supportive organisations and individuals of different political orientation. Eventually, in 1996, this coalition became a NGO of its own, the Forum Civil Peace Service. The Civil Peace Service as envisaged at that time was planned to be 'large-scale', having the goal to develop a pool of 100,000 people within 20 years. Trittmann (2000) describes in detail the lobbying that began in 1995. First individual politicians from all parties were contacted who were known to be open to this thinking. The result was a proposal in the Parliament, submitted by a small number of MPs from all parties just after the Dayton Agreement. This was to train within two years 200 experts in conflict resolution to be sent to Bosnia. After this proposal was rejected, a new opening was found when one of the bundeslaender (states) - North-Rhine Westphalia that had just formed a new government of Social Democrats and Greens - showed interest in supporting conflict resolution and a peace corps. It decided to fund from 1997 onwards a suggested four-month training for what the German initiators by then called 'peace experts' (today the official English translation is 'peace consultants'), having in the meanwhile abandoned the concept of sending large numbers of people. The first courses were offered by two umbrella organisations, the Forum CPS and the umbrella of the Protestant Peace and Development Services in Germany, AGDF (see Wagner 2000 for a description of the development of the first courses).

Parallel to these efforts to establish training courses, lobbying at the federal level continued in the form of conferences and round tables to which state representatives were invited. Public events made the concept known, and intensive liaison with the existing volunteer and development service organisation was required to convince them of the need for such a new service. In 1997 the Parliament organised a hearing on the subject; but again, under the conservative government of that time, there was no opening for institutionalisation. In all these discussions, the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia played the role of the prime example for the need of such work. In late 1998, with the change of government from the conservatives to a Social-Democrat--Green coalition, this changed. When forming the coalition, both parties agreed to support 'an infrastructure for crisis prevention and civil conflict resolution, including the deployment of 'peace experts' or 'peace consultants'. A (still-existing) instrument and a budget line 'Civil Peace Service' was created, based in the Ministry of Development.³⁸⁵ Of course, the Civil Peace Service was not created as an instrument to intervene in the conflicts of the former Yugoslavia though the first projects funded mostly took place there. However, without the impetus of these conflicts, the establishment of such an instrument would probably not have taken place.

8.5 Conclusions

This chapter has sought to give an impression of what civil society actors did aside from direct project work in former Yugoslavia. The picture that emerged has been one of intensive public debate, with two foci of actors: The first were the mass media that not only played a crucial role in forming public opinion, but also stood in a reciprocal relationship with the political actors who both were influenced by them, and sought to influence what was reported on their actions.

The second focus was those groups and organisations engaged in public protest and advocacy work. Besides the peace movement that was probably the strongest in this type of activity there have been also other groups and organisations involved – human rights and women's organisations have been mentioned in particular. But while they shared discontent with what the state interveners did, the contents of what they protested and lobbied for or against varied a lot. In fact, contradictory objectives have been pursued: for or against (more) military intervention, and for or against the secession of republics or autonomous regions being perhaps the most contested fields, often setting not only civil society actors against state actors, but disagreements within civil society as well.

8.5.1 Protest, Advocacy and Work on the Ground

One of the noteworthy points is that many actors combined protest and advocacy with work in the area of former Yugoslavia, be it humanitarian aid, human rights monitoring or one or several of the multiple other activities described in the last chapters. That is not unusual for large agencies – with very few exceptions humanitarian aid, development and conflict transformation agencies engage in advocacy work from time to time. However, in this survey there have been many small groups, mostly from the peace and the feminist movement, for whom the order of activities was reversed. Their starting point has been work in their home countries, not the work in the field. Many peace groups, for example, had just gone through a period of intense protests against the US-led attack in early 1991 on Iraq after Iraq had occupied Kuwait (the so-called 2nd Iraq war). But then during the first years of the wars in former Yugoslavia they added direct work in the field as was described in the earlier chapters to the plethora of their activities, some of them explicitly explaining that they preferred such work over protest against the war back home (see Buro 1992).

³⁸⁵ Until end of 2008, about 470 'peace experts' have been sent to about 45 countries. The annual budget increased over these years from 5,3 million € to 19 million €. See Bundesministerium fuer wirtschaftliche Zusammenarbeit und Entwicklung 2008b, Kortmann 2009.

The means the groups used were mostly ‘traditional’ - appeals, public events, information through alternative media, vigils, advocacy work and, much more rarely, mass protest on the streets. Civil disobedience occurred but was not prominent, and never went beyond the symbolic.³⁸⁶

8.5.2 The Functions of Public Information, Support, Protest and Advocacy

Public information, protest and advocacy had different functions:

- Expressing disagreement with the action of state actors (governments, UN, NATO);
- Informing their own constituency;
- Struggling for shaping a consensus position within their own constituency;
- Informing wider public (usually on a ‘truth’ different than what the political leaders or the mass media pronounced); and
- Seeking enforcement of a certain act (stopping the war on Yugoslavia, paying recompensation to victims) through engaging the legal system.

³⁸⁶ As far as I can tell, there have been no civil disobedience acts that were considerably disruptive or effectively threatened to withdraw power from the state actors.

Support activities (training, funding etc) were activities that sought to empower other actors to intervene in the conflicts. Without such indirect intervention, work in the field would probably have been impossible. In several places, in particular in Chapter 6 on peace-building, it has been mentioned how otherwise well-intentioned projects suffered from the use of field staff without adequate skills. And lack of coordination between NGOs led to contradictory and even harmful consequences, for example when different donors competed with each other or pursued different policies in regard to choosing beneficiaries of humanitarian relief and reconstruction efforts.³⁸⁷

8.5.3 Relationship Between International and Local Civil Society

An important issue is the relationship between the international groups (NGOs) that claimed to work in solidarity with local anti-war groups/civil society, and these local groups. On the one hand, international civil society helped the local civil society by giving them a voice internationally through translating and reprinting articles, statements and the like, by creating alternative media where critical journalists from the region could publish, and by inviting their speakers abroad to give presentations. On the other hand, there has been a clear disagreement between those groups and many of their pacifist supporters on the matter of military intervention. The local groups generally were in favour of military action by the international community while the pacifist organisations among their friends abroad had a problem with it (see the two open letters from the local groups and from War Resisters' International quoted above).³⁸⁸

³⁸⁷ The whole of support activities fall under the wider issue of building and maintaining an infrastructure of conflict intervention. The need for such an infrastructure has become increasingly acknowledged in the last ten years, and is reflected in many policy debates both among state and non-state actors (see for example the entries in the Berghof Handbook for Conflict Transformation and Reyhler and Paffenholz 2001). It is not far-fetched to argue that the experiences intervening actors made in the former Yugoslavia in the 1990s played an important role as a background for this discussion.

³⁸⁸ This is also partly true for the Kosovo solidarity work. It may not be too far-fetched to assume that the concrete support the local groups received at the same time from the internationals was the reason that local activists lived with these disagreements, while the internationals appreciated the work of the local groups and valued the existence of local partners too much to let this disagreement to stand in their way.

8.5.4 A 'Yugoslavia Movement'

Were the conflicts in former Yugoslavia nothing more than a new topic existing movements like the peace movement addressed? Or is it possible to speak of an international social movement that formed itself around the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia (a 'Yugoslavia movement')? And if so, what kind of movement was it? Or was it not one movement but several?

There is no single definition of social movements that is shared by all those studying social movements. The definition that I prefer comes from Dieter Rucht. He speaks of systems of action of mobilized networks of groups and organizations that are of a certain duration and based on collective identity, and seek to promote, prevent or undo social change with the means of protest (Rucht 2007:15, translation CS).

Most authors see social movements particularly active in the field of collective protest.

Social movements can be interpreted as the rational and purposeful efforts of people who are not represented in institutional politics, and who collectively and publicly express their demands in order to influence public policy making (Kolb 2005:34).³⁸⁹

Most movements focus on issues in their own society. Those that are dealing with issues abroad are usually described under the terminology of 'solidarity movements' or 'transnational movements' (see Passy 2001).³⁹⁰

In the case of the former Yugoslavia, there are two arguments speaking in favour of considering it a movement of its own:

1. The fact that there were many new groups emerging during the first year of the wars in 1991 and 1992, as the survey on interventions clearly shows.
2. The sheer amount of activities by civil society actors here, ranging from organizing direct help to protest and other work back home.

³⁸⁹ See also Rucht 2002, Tilly 2004.

³⁹⁰ Passy (2001:5) defines solidarity movements as follows: "Individuals who are involved in this movement defend the interests, rights, and identities of others", not benefiting directly from their participation in collective action. Sometimes also the term 'altruistic movements' is used. See Burstein 1999, Guigni 1999 and also the articles in Guigni and Passy (eds) 2001 on 'political altruism'.

Therefore I would argue that there cannot be any doubt that there has been a special movement on the former Yugoslavia, and that it cannot be just subsumed under 'peace movement' as for example Schmitz (1998) does. This movement had aspects of both solidarity movements and of national protest movements: It was a solidarity movement insofar as there was a lot of support of local civil society. Also the intense engagement in humanitarian aid, though being a different kind of solidarity, is often counted as an activity of what some authors call 'altruistic movements' (see Burstein 1999, Guigni 1999 and the articles in Guigni and Passy 2001). And it was a protest movement focussing on the politics 'at home' addressing the interventions of governments and international organisations.

That there were contrasting and contending views on what to do about the conflict does not invalid this assessment about there having been a 'Yugoslavia movement', at least when following Guigni who points out that social movements are complex sets of groups, organizations, and actions that may have different goals as well as different strategies for reaching their aims (Guigni 1999:xx).

That would mean that movements do not have to speak with one voice, nor actually pursue the same goals. This 'Yugoslavia movement' was a movement that was neither fully a solidarity movement, nor a protest movement targeting the politics of the home countries of the civil society actors but had elements of both, uniting them in a manner hitherto unknown.

8.5.5 The Impact of Public Information, Protest and Advocacy

Last not least it needs to be asked what influence did the information, protest and advocacy activities have on the political decision-makers?

For the mass media, it has been assessed that there definitely was an influence on politics even though how it exactly came about, and how decisive it was remains contested.

For advocacy in its strict sense of the word, some examples have been given above on its successful application, with the establishment of state-funded civil peace services throughout Europe being perhaps the most relevant and long-lasting outcome.

More difficult is to assess what role the protest activities played. Researchers of international movements and NGOs have rarely been able to make a convincing case for the impact of protest, because the question of attribution is extremely sensitive and complex. Study of consequences of social movements considered “one of the most neglected topics in the literature” (Guigni 1999:xivp, see also Meyer 1999).

In the literature on former Yugoslavia, some very generalised assessments can be found, like ‘pacifism’ being blamed for a late military intervention in Bosnia, or human rights reports by NGOs causing local perpetrators to harden their position in order to portray themselves more successfully as misunderstood or maligned by the international community (Fitzduff and Church 2004:11, citing Anderson 1999).

There are few indicators that there was much impact from the side of those challenging military means beyond the public debate on how to respond to the war in Bosnia. The balance went rather in favour of fast and decisive military action or at least the readiness to apply such means, as the case of Macedonia 2001 shows. The reasons for these developments are, of course, very complex, with the contribution of those parts of civil society that demanded ‘humanitarian intervention’ probably being a small one compared to the interests and power politics of NATO and the European Union respectively the nations leading in each of the two alliances.

This chapter has tried to show that intervention does not necessarily require physical presence in the conflict area. The heated discussions and the intensive lobbying that accompanied the direct work in the former Yugoslavia were more than just a ‘background noise’ to the work on the ground. In many ways it shaped the motivation as well as the focus of what civil society actors undertook, and in turn the experiences made on the ground were fed back to the discussions in the home countries.

9. Conclusions: Strategies of Intervention by Civil Society Actors in Protracted Violent Conflict

The preceding chapters have described a multitude of activities of civil society actors, categorised by ‘grand strategies’ of peace-making, peace-keeping, peace-building and ‘public information, support, and protest and advocacy’. In the ‘grand strategy’ of peace-making only few cases of mediation involving political leaders were found, dealing with particular aspects or moments of conflicts. Civil society actors were shown to have access to the high level leadership only if they either came from a peer position (elder statesmen like Jimmy Carter who mediated in Bosnia), or have established their credentials as honest brokers in long-term work (Sant’ Egidio mediating between Serbia and Kosovo). Though the two cases presented (a cease-fire in Bosnia-Herzegovina and an agreement on re-opening of schools in Kosovo) were not of lasting impact, they showed that civil society mediators can make a difference where official negotiators fail. Much more frequent have been different kinds of second-track workshops and comparable meetings that targeted either influential people belonging to the respective current regime, or – more often in the case under study - the political and civil society opposition. Equally grouped under peace-making have been so-called micro negotiations and mediation at local or regional level.

Like peace-making, civil society peace-keeping was dealing with two different contexts: the ‘conflict at large’, and with concrete protection of concrete persons at certain places and times. Three types of peace-keeping were found in this sample: A longer-term project with peace-keeping as one – but not the only – element of its mandate (Balkan Peace Team), protection activities by projects pursuing other objectives but who assumed a role in protection when the situation warranted it, and short-term interpositioning projects (the different peace ‘caravans’ in Bosnia) – the latter with rather doubtful outcomes. For the issue of what civilian peace-keeping can achieve as an alternative to military peace-keeping, a better picture arises by including the civilian monitoring missions sent to the area by international state actors (ECMM, KVM). However, the evaluation of civilian peace-keeping remains contested with contrary conclusions being drawn from the examples – while one side sees ample proof that protection needs armed force, the other believes that the admittedly limited successes of the civilian missions are indicators for a hitherto untapped potential of nonviolent peace-keeping.

As the different size of the chapters indicates already, civil society peace-making and peace-keeping were rare in the former Yugoslavia compared to peace-building.

Peace-building activities by civil society actors have been described in nine categories: 1. humanitarian relief, 2. disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration of soldiers (DDR), 3. reconstruction and refugee return, 4. social and psycho-social work, 5. economic recovery, 6. transitional justice and human rights documentation, 7. state-building, democratisation and civil society support, 8. promoting peace skills and dialogue and 9. cultural activities. Generally speaking, of particular impact seem to have been multi-dimensional projects combining relief or reconstruction with social work or other forms of non-physical support, and support for civil society that oriented itself on the needs of the local groups and institutions already in place rather than artificially contributing to the creation of new ones. Further it was noticed that an overriding concern with interethnic cooperation and reconciliation that dominated much of the work seems to have had only modest outcomes if measured on the professed higher goal of preventing future violence.

Regarding what civil society actors did aside from direct project work in former Yugoslavia, the picture that emerged has been one of intense public debate in the mass media and protest and advocacy targeting the international (state) community. It was concluded that it is possible to speak of a social movement on the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia in the 1990s. The probably main positive outcome of these debates and struggles has been a much increased interest in and support for civil conflict transformation by both non-state and state actors.³⁹¹

This final chapter here will not repeat in further detail what was already concluded in the chapters on each of the different strategies. Rather, it takes one step back and tries to make some further more general observations regarding conflict interventions in the area of former Yugoslavia. The chapter falls into two parts. The first part looks once more at the work of civil society interveners, their instruments, goals and strategies, as well as the question of ‘do no harm’ – or rather: the instances where civil society intervention did harm. The second part comes back to the general framework of conflict intervention with the three ‘grand strategies’ presented in chapter 2. Based on the findings of this case study here, an expansion of that model is suggested. The final remarks then comment on the role of civil society actors in conflict intervention, and express the need of further case studies of other areas in order to confirm some of the findings and conclusions.

³⁹¹ Unfortunately, in addition to or in spite of the equally increased reliance on military means by state actors that can be observed in the last ten years as well.

9.1 On the Work of Civil Society Interveners

9.1.1 A Wide Range of Instruments of Intervention

The survey on interventions in the conflicts in former Yugoslavia that was the basis for this study identifies about 230 methods or instruments of intervention by non-state actors (including actors that would not be considered civil society). This list that can be found in appendix 1 and is certainly far from complete. To develop a systematic overview as did Gene Sharp (1973) for methods of nonviolent actions, the survey would have to be expanded to project work in other conflict areas.

Nevertheless, a certain picture has developed, with the distinction between the functions of peace-making, peace-keeping, peace-building and information/ protest/ advocacy proving to be a framework that is not ideal but useful enough to categorise the vast majority of functions that activities fulfilled.³⁹²

Another important observation to be made regards exclusiveness versus combining different approaches. While most programmes run by governments or international organisations have had no problem with mixing different approaches and strategies, NGOs and citizens’ group – with the exception of some large established INGOs – tended towards a single focus approach. In the area of former Yugoslavia, many of them had only one particular activity, be it humanitarian aid, training work, setting up one youth centre or the like. In a sample of 420 citizens’ groups and NGOs mainly from European countries, the following distribution was found. Humanitarian ³⁹² The support activities described in chapter 8 are left out here since they are the basis for working in the other strategies.

And to avoid a misunderstanding here it needs to be emphasised that this is about functions, not about projects. Many civil society projects were multi-purpose or multi-functional, pursuing more than one strategy at the same time aid for the purpose of this comparison has been separated from other peace-building activities. The total figures are of no importance, but the picture is documented here because I believe it shows a tendency.

Table 5) Combination of Strategies

The picture probably holds few surprises for those familiar with grassroots' work in conflict areas. Those using only one approach or type of activity are clearly more than those combining different types (358:62). Aid and other types of peace-building activities are those most usually combined, although a more detailed analysis would show that there is some chronological sequence to it: Many small groups started with aid and later branched out into other types of work. Civilian peace-keeping work as mentioned above could only be found in combination with other approaches – a finding that cannot be generalised since in other conflict areas there are NGOs that fully concentrate on peace-keeping.³⁹³ The rather high number of those who combined either aid or other peace-building work with protest fall, as described in the last chapter, in two categories: on the one hand, those whose primary mandate was work in the field and who engaged in advocacy when needed to support or protect that work, and on the other hand movement organisations traditionally more at home with protest and advocacy but who added work in the field to their activities in the course of the conflicts in former Yugoslavia.

³⁹³ For example Peace Brigades International or Nonviolent Peaceforce. See Moser-Puangsuwan and Weber (eds) 2000, Schweitzer et al 2001).

9.1.2 Much Help But Not Enough Empowerment: Some Final Observations Regarding Goals and Strategies

9.1.2.1 On the Goals Pursued

The multiple goals that intervening civil society actors pursued in order to have an impact on the ground can be generalised and reduced to a few basic objectives, pursued sometimes with more than one strategy:

- Stop the war and /or prevent future violence from re-occurring. This is an overall goal of the vast majority of activities in all ‘grand strategies’.

In peace-making, to

- Contribute to a political solution of the ‘conflicts at large’ (e.g. high-level and middle level peace-making, advocacy work).
- Find solutions for concrete manifestations of the overall conflicts or related matters at the purview of those at middle or grassroots’ level negotiating about them (e.g. trying to ensure that certain villages do not participate in fighting, as did happen in some instances in Croatia).

In peace-keeping and some forms of peace-building, to

- Protect people from violence (e.g. protective accompaniment, helping people to flee war and to return safely).

In peace-building, to

- Meet basic needs like food, housing and health.
- Promote interethnic cooperation and reconciliation.
- Restore a functioning society, state and economy and promote political change.
- A second set of goals can be identified aiming more to influence the international political debate and the intervening states than directly addressing the parties on the ground: _ Influence the actions of international state actors in regard to the conflict, in particular here demanding either
 - a) establishing faster and more decisive military intervention to protect human rights and prevent genocide
 - b) ‘civilising’ international politics by promoting nonviolent methods of intervention and the non-use of military force.

- Advocate for institutional support for activities of civil society.³⁹⁴

In the previous chapters much was said about the degree to which organisations succeeded in achieving these goals. In a nutshell: It is a picture of very mixed results. Immediate material aid helped people to survive the war, but on the other hand the economic situation in the war-torn countries remained poor. With the exception of Slovenia and to a certain degree Croatia that thrives on tourism, most countries are still highly dependent on international financial aid. There have been projects that took care of the physical reconstruction, projects that without doubt protected local activists and citizens against violence, and projects that had a positive impact regarding overcoming the traumata of war and rebuilding civil life. But on the other side there are the disillusioning findings on the question of whether peace-building made a difference in Kosovo 2004 (CDA -Collaborative Learning Projects 2006), and also a general lack of convincing evidence that all the work on interethnic reconciliation has had impact beyond short-term successes like mixed football teams or women's groups. Local civil society groups grew in all countries in spite of the hostile political situation in the 1990s, and in one case even managed to overthrow their repressive regime. On the other hand, Bosnia-Herzegovina and Kosovo have shown that intense support of civil society, especially if that meant initiating new NGOs to become implementing partners for international programmes, does not automatically lead to more democracy and liberal values (see Fischer 2008, and the section below on 'doing harm').

9.1.2.2 On the Role Assumptions on the Causes of the Conflict Played

The analysis and assumptions of civil society actors about the conflict played an important role in the development of strategies and activities. Many civil society

³⁹⁴ Besides these motives for intervention, there have been organisational or individual agendas that clearly played an important role:

- The altruistic impetus of 'something must be done', the need to help (mostly to be found in the grassroots' relief efforts).
- Show through examples that civilian/nonviolent methods of dealing with conflict 'work' and deserve (state) support
- Satisfy the stakeholders of an organisation by showing that the organisation responds to these conflicts that are high on the international agenda.
- Have projects that attract funding (and thereby often also secure the economic survival of the own organisation).

actors espoused the ethnic paradigm, assuming that the ethnic conflict was either the cause of the conflicts, or at least the most obvious and relevant block on the path to a peaceful future and the prevention of future violence (see Duffield 1999:142). An expression of dealing with the ethnic paradigm have been the overriding concern with 'multi-ethnicity' in all programmes, and the multitude of projects like trainings in prejudice reduction, nonviolent communication or other tools designed to overcome identity conflicts.

Only some organisations have argued that this approach often was not particularly helpful because the ethnic divide played less of a role than other divides, be it political divides or conflicts between refugees and those who stayed during the war, (see Kurschat 1998).

Other groups, often those part of the Western peace movement, followed the interpretation of local oppositional intellectuals by blaming the elites of all sides for the conflict that used (and often first awakened) nationalism for the pursuit of their own goals (see Kaldor 2001, Woodward 1995). Some even maintained that it was no ethnic conflict at all and that people had always lived together peacefully. This approach found expression, for example, by delivering aid consciously to all sides of the conflict, and/or by civil society support protecting and empowering local groups to stand up against these elites.

Still others more or less accepted the official explanations and views predominant in the media and statements of politicians at the time, using terms like 'the Serb-occupied Bosnia' (as if there had been no Serbs in Bosnia), 'war of conquest' etc., and directing their support (be it advocacy or aid) only to the side(s) they perceived as the victims.³⁹⁵

Leftist groups tended to interpret the wars as an imperialist scheme to defeat socialism seen as being represented by Milosevic's Yugoslavia, and therefore concentrated their focus on making the official politicians' stand point of that country being heard, and rejecting any kind of foreign intervention into the conflicts, often including that of civil society.

But the survey also showed that at least from the side of small and new civil society groups, there was often little analysis of the conflict at all. All-too-often activities were chosen on the basis of a felt need ‘to do something’, or unreflected assumptions which were rarely questioned. A result of the lack of good analysis was that strategies and activities seem to some degree have been more determined by what the civil society interveners thought they were good at doing (for example giving trainings in nonviolence or mediation) rather than assessing what was really needed. The saying that to the person who has a hammer every problem looks like a nail unfortunately has found ample examples in this case, and emphasises the plea by Anderson and Olson (2003) to start with an analysis of what is needed for ‘Peace Writ Large’ as they put it (see also Paffenholz and Reychler 2007).

³⁹⁵ I have a number of leaflets collected that express such views.

9.1.2.3 Doing Harm

The interventions in the former Yugoslavia have unfortunately produced a long list of examples on how international actors can do harm through their interventions. Doing harm is not a prerogative of state actors. Although it may be a bit disheartening to finish the study with such a long list of negatives, naming them is important because each of them directly translates into lessons for future interventions.

1. One large issue is the very mixed consequences international intervention has had for local civil society. On the one hand, the international support for oppositional groups and independent media was very important for the work of these groups (see chapter 7). On the other hand, however, the influx of internationals willing to spend great quantities of money on relief, reconstruction, trauma support or ‘civil society building’ led to several negative outcomes. (See for the following Duffield 1996, Edwards and Hulme 1998, Stubbs 1999, 2000 and 2007, Smillie and Todorovic 2001, Broughton and Fraenkel 2002:27, Cooley and Ron 2002, De Vrieze 2002, Du Pont 2002:239, Lyons 2007:67, Sejfiija 2007:134p.)
 - Projects were undertaken and many NGOs were being founded just because there was money (often called ‘seed money’) available, in order to get a share of this new source of income. In all countries hundreds of NGOs sprang up, but few of them were independent of one particular donor, and few were effective. According to the Local Democracy Agency in Tuzla, in Bosnia-Herzegovina a total of 8,000 NGOs were officially registered as ‘humanitarian organisations’ between 1992 and 2001, and around 30.000 projects undertaken (Sejfić 2007:125). In Kosovo, at the beginning of the new decade more than 2,000 local NGOs had registered. Most of these new NGOs in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Kosovo were ‘service’ or ‘third sector’ NGOs. And the phenomenon is not restricted to the protectorates. Broughton (2002) for example counted in Macedonia “hundreds of NGOs” of that type.

- Many international NGOs have been conducting their projects through local implementing partners. But in many cases the local partners were only fig leaves established for meeting the requirements of international donors but without any real say or influence on the shape of the projects.³⁹⁶
- The NGO sector became a labour market. While on the one hand this could be seen as a contribution to income-generation in a desperate economic situation, on the other hand it made the concept of voluntary work highly unpopular, more unpopular than it was before. (Volunteerism anyway was not well developed in the former Yugoslavia.) The fact that there were now sources for getting remuneration for almost any kind of work, including activism, led to a set-up where work was often only done if it could be paid for (e. g. there are many stories that people expected to be paid to participate in conferences or trainings). If civil society is defined as a sector thriving on voluntary commitment by citizens, then this phenomenon is clearly counter-productive.
- There have been both processes of professionalization and de-professionalization, especially in the sector of social welfare. On the one hand, work that in other circumstances would be traditionally volunteer work became paid work and therefore professional, but on the other hand crowds of untrained people or people with only a short training on conflict resolution skills but without an adequate professional background entered the fields of social work and psychological assistance.

³⁹⁶ Llamazares and Reynolds Levy 2003 (quoting Sarah C. White 2000:144) distinguish several categories of partner relationships: ‘Nominal participation’ where local partners are mostly only symbolic or named in funding applications because that is a requirement by international donors, ‘instrumental participation’ where local partners are seen as a way to increase efficiency, ‘representative participation’ where local people’s interests and needs shape the project, and ‘transformative participation’ where empowerment is both means and end of process.

-
- Another point here is ‘projectisation’, meaning that most of the work had to be framed as projects suitable for the short-term cycles (usually one year, sometimes two or three) of international funding (see Stubbs 2000). After the end of a grant, the current work had to be abandoned or rephrased to meet the requirements of being a new ‘project’ because rarely funders were willing to engage in the same work over a longer period. Most of them saw themselves rather in the role of somebody ‘enabling something new to get off the ground’, but forgot (or chose to forget) that there were few alternative sources for existing work to be funded (e.g. almost no governmental money, no local private donors).
 - Stubbs (2007:221) also observed a new division between service-providing NGOs and ‘the supposedly superior ‘conscience or advocacy-oriented NGOs’.
 - Competition and lack of coordination among international organisations led to parallel projects (more than one youth centre in a smaller community, different policies of how to finance reconstruction, etc), or on the contrary to a situation where different actors ‘passed the buck’, and in the end no one took responsibility for a matter (see Kriesberg 2001:419).
 - Last not least, the dependency on international funding in some cases has threatened to undermine the political independence and the credibility of local civil society (see the case of Otpor in chapter 7).
2. A second area of concern caused by the presence of state and non-state actors has been the economic side (see Cooley and Ron 2002, Gagnon 1998b, Hansen 2000, Stubbs 1999, 2000 and 2007):
- Prices (for example for rent) increased astronomically.
 - The local labour market and salary levels were distorted with, for example, a driver of an international agency earning more than a judge employed by the national authorities.
 - In consequence, qualified people tended to work for the internationals rather than helping directly to rebuild their country. Just not to be misunderstood: In a situation of extreme poverty and high unemployment where whole families depend often on the income of one person, people have little choice than to go for the best-paid job. The problem and the blame lie with the internationals for not being mindful of these problems.

3. A third issue has been that civil society agents began taking care of all kinds of social and welfare services that in a functioning country are the responsibility of the state. International or local NGOs became providers of social services, services exclusively funded by international sources. When the international money was reduced or stopped coming, often the services were discontinued (see Edwards and Hulme 1998).³⁹⁷
4. A fourth issue is the symbolic side of the international intervention – a side Mary B. Anderson in her ‘do no harm’ concept sets much store by. For the case under study here it may be observed that the support did not always empower local people but sometimes also led to disempowerment.
 - The knowledge of being dependent on international aid is not only a fact that neither the local governments nor local civil society could disregard, but people are also always reminded of it on the symbolic level by the overwhelming presence of road signs and plaques advertising donors all over the place, from youth centres to private homes.
 - The same disempowerment can be found in the areas of security and law: Security in the protectorates has become a task of the international military rather than a responsibility of the local law enforcement agencies.
 - The persecution of war crimes for many years was relegated solely to the International Tribunal that generally is only then criticised if it opens a case against someone of their ‘own’ ethnicity, but welcomed as long as it persecutes those of the ‘others’.
5. A fifth point, already discussed in Chapter 7 is the overriding concern with the ‘ethnic conflict’ from the side of many interveners. It has to be asked if this overriding focus of so many projects may not have strengthened rather than lessened identification along ethnic lines, especially if – as was the case certainly in the first years – many well-meaning but naïve international groups without much if any knowledge about the local culture and politics but a heavy baggage of antinationalist sentiment started to work on ‘reconciliation’.

³⁹⁷ That international funding dwindles always is the case some years after a cease-fire: in Bosnia-Herzegovina it happened from c. 1999 on, and also from Kosovo the caravan has started to move to Afghanistan and Iraq.

A small number of critical authors have asked the question what the difference is between the international politics in the former Yugoslavia, especially in the protectorates, and earlier colonial politics. Roland Paris (2002) compares the protectorates with the era of the “mission civilisatrice” (the belief that European imperial powers had the duty to ‘civilise’ their overseas possessions) of the colonial area, and also Stubbs (a.a.O.) compares it with colonial politics. Chandler, one of the sharpest critics of the protectorates, states:

“‘White Man’s Burden’ today appears recast in the liberal language of ‘ethical’ foreign policy, rights protection and ‘civil society’” (Chandler 1999:3).

I think that their point is a valid one. While seen from the point of international law, the situation is of course different because today’s control of other countries is based on international law and meant to be a transitional phase before the country returns to independence.³⁹⁸ But on the ideological side the attitudes are not that dissimilar. The (Western) interveners mostly imported their way of doing things: They taught them, they modelled them, and sometimes even enforced them with the help of their military. And this was (is) not a privilege of the state actors alone – the civil society actors on the ground were playing a big role here as the well through the simple fact of their presence, with the exception of course that they did not have means of direct enforcement available.

9.1.3 Relationship Between Governmental and Non-state Actors

Generally, relations between international interveners were characterised by a mixture of conflict and cooperation. While there was always the usual mutual criticism - either on particulars or general policies (see chapter 8) - and even some cases of civil society actors openly defying state actors in acts of civil disobedience, in the overriding number of projects cooperation between non-state and state actors was dominant. Three types of relationships can be distinguished:

- The first is a funding one – state agencies funding NGO work as many European ³⁹⁸ At least in theory. If the practice would always confirm it is debatable when thinking for example of the long-term economic exploitation contracts the USA have made with Iraq.

governments, the US and Canada did.³⁹⁹

- The second would be that of NGOs becoming an implementing partner for an international organisation such as UNHCR, or carrying out programmes that were in the interest of their government but which the government did not wish to take of itself.⁴⁰⁰
- The third (that often goes together with a funding relationship) would be a positive relationship to the state actors present on the ground, for example using their influence and potential for the application of force in controversial cases of refugee/IDP return.

9.2 On the Theoretical Framework of Conflict Intervention

9.2.1 The Hypotheses on Conflict Intervention

In chapter 1 a number of often-held assumptions on conflict intervention by civil society actors were listed. On the basis of the data found in this case study, the following conclusions can be drawn:

9.2.1.1 Different Actors having Different Instruments and Strategies Available

The first hypotheses concerned different actors having different instruments and strategies of conflict intervention available. Hypothesis 1.a) had been that civil society actors are mostly involved in peace-building, and play an essential role there. This assumption has found ample documentation in this case study.

It was also found that they had indeed only a very limited role in finding negotiated solutions at the governmental level (1.b) - the only clear-cut case being Sant'Egidio mediating in the Kosovo conflict.

³⁹⁹ For example Swedish SIDA, Canadian CIDA, Norwegian People's Aid (see Evensmo 2000, Duffield 1996, Du Pont 2002:239, Large n.d.).

⁴⁰⁰ The difference to a mere funding relation is that here the international organisation defines the programme, and the NGO is carrying it out. In other funding relationships, it is usually the funded organisation that is applying for the funding, describing a programme.

9.2.1.2 Levels of Society Related to Instruments and Strategies

The second hypothesis was that different levels of society (top level, middle range, grassroots) require different instruments and strategies of intervention. This hypothesis is difficult to substantiate. While it is undoubtedly true for the top level (to which civil society actors as mentioned have only limited access), middle and grassroots' level approaches have been – with the exception of peace-making - in many areas hard to distinguish, so that a conclusion for all strategies of intervention is difficult. In peace-making, the strategies and approaches chosen clearly varied depending on the level of society targeted. But in peace-keeping and peace-building the difference seems rather to have been the geographical range of the initiatives: there were projects targeting the whole country (e.g. building up parent-teacher-associations), projects targeting certain regions (e.g. Eastern Slavonia), and projects from which only the population of one particular town or even only part of a town benefited (e.g. youth centres).

9.2.1.3 Stages of Conflict and Instruments and Strategies

The third hypothesis had been that different stages of conflict escalation warrant different instruments and strategies of intervention – or that different methods vary in their effectiveness depending on when they are used. In the chapters on the individual strategies, the assumption has been rejected that any of the 'grand strategies' should be identified with only one particular stage in the conflict cycle:⁴⁰¹

- Peace-making was shown to be a rather complex affair, with at least one 'peace' being made while other conflicts in the same region went on simultaneously (Croat-Muslim war in Bosnia).
- Peace-keeping took place both before, during and after violent conflict (e.g. Balkan Peace Team being in Croatia before, during and after the reoccupation of the Krajina in 1995).⁴⁰²

⁴⁰¹ In appendix 2 the distribution of certain activities over some years, in each case including years of war and years after war is displayed: Training in Croatia between 1991 and 1995, trauma work in Bosnia-Herzegovina between 1991 and 1998, youth centres in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina between 1991 and 1998 and physical reconstruction in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina between 1991 and 1997.

- While numerically the tendency indeed showed peace-building activities to increase after cease-fires, there were a significant number of examples of it taking place during war and/or even before the conflicts became violent.

As to the subthesis 3.a) that the more escalated a conflict is, the more coercion/force is needed in order to intervene successfully, this question was discussed in chapter 4. The result was that empirically in most cases this matches the strategy used by the international (state) interveners. But there also have been exceptions that question if that hypothesis is always true, or if it is not rather a self-fulfilling prophecy: The war between Croats and Muslims in Bosnia-Herzegovina was ended by a negotiated settlement without obvious 'sticks' (see chapter 4.1.3).

The last sub-thesis, 3.b) that stated that nonviolent peace building and development projects are only possible before a conflict escalates to war, and in the post-war period, has been clearly falsified as amply shown by the number of such activities undertaken in war times (see Appendix 2 for some examples).

9.2.2 A Widened Framework for Categorising Conflict Intervention

I would like now to return to the question of the 'grand strategies' that have been used to categorise the interventions into the conflicts of former Yugoslavia. They were introduced in chapter 2, and in the chapters describing each of them observations were made regarding the following criteria:

- the problem they deal with,
- the function they have,
- the frequency in which they can be found in each conflict stage,
- the target group of the intervention,
- and the instruments used.

Here at the end of the study I would like now to summarise the findings regarding these criteria, and as a conclusion suggest a description of the framework of four ⁴⁰² Better-known examples would be found if looking at state actors - the international military peace-keeping missions: The preventive mission in Macedonia, UNPROFOR in Bosnia-Herzegovina during the war there, and the different UN NATO-led missions after the end of the wars in Croatia, Bosnia and Kosovo.

‘grand strategies’ of conflict intervention. This framework is meant not to refer to civil society actors alone but to all actors in conflict intervention.

9.2.1.1 The Problem They Deal With and the Function of Each Strategy

Peace-making is dealing with the problem of perceived incompatibilities of interest, with the function to find a negotiated solution.

The problem peace-keeping is dealing with is (potential, I would like to add) violent behaviour, with its function being the control, prevention or reduction of violence.

Peace-building is about the causes and consequences of violent conflict and war:

Material destruction, what could be called non-physical destruction (social and psycho-social consequences of war), and lack of structures and relationships necessary for sustainable peace with justice. It has three different though related functions: It addresses relationships, it deals with structural matters (for example what comes with ‘democratisation’), and as the third function ‘dealing with the destructive processes that accompany war’ (aid, reconstruction) has been added.

The problems information, protest and advocacy deal with as defined here is a) lack of knowledge about what is happening, and b) the behaviour of other intervening actors. Its functions are information, the expression of disagreement with the actions of other actors, advising them what to do (instead), and seeking enforcement of a certain action through law.

9.2.1.2 Their Presence and Frequency in Different Conflict Stages

As to the conflict stage, this chart here can only describe what was found in this case study. For other conflicts, the situation is different. In the former Yugoslavia, peace-making was mostly undertaken when the conflict had already escalated to violence, with it being comparatively rare before and after war. Peace-keeping was found in all stages of escalation. Peace-building took mostly place after war but to a perhaps surprising degree also during war (see above). In the phase before escalation it was comparatively rare. Protest and advocacy like the headlines in the mass media tended to follow the ‘burning issues’, meaning that it was mostly found during the times of open war.

9.2.1.3 The Level of Society Targeted

In general the intervening actors taken all together targeted all levels of society – top leadership, middle and grassroots’ level. However, the degree and frequency in which each of these levels were targeted varied considerably. For state actors (including international actors like the United Nations etc.) typically governments were the target group of peace-making, while civil society actors can be found more frequently dealing with middle or grassroots levels.

In peace-keeping, state actors usually dealt with the ‘conflict at large’ having the military and other armed forces as their target group. Civil society actors also tried to do so (see the different interpositioning projects), but more typically – and more successfully – their target group were violence-prone groups and individuals, and more concrete conflicts within the overall conflict (for example human rights violations and their perpetrators).

In peace-building, state actors tended to focus more on macro-programmes either dealing with structural changes, or reaching whole categories of population (‘the’ refugees, ‘the’ school children, etc), while civil society actors could be found both in the macro sphere and in having small-scale localised projects that did not reach beyond the particular town, village or small target group they worked with.⁴⁰³

Public information became much more frequent and intense when a conflict had become violent, and the same is true for protest and advocacy, their target groups being the public in general, intervening actors and also the own constituency.

9.2.1.4 The Instruments Used

The last factor to describe these four strategies are the instruments used. Peace-making has three: Law, negotiation and force.

Peace-keeping as well has three. Force, deterrence and reference to international law, and relationship-building.

Peace-building displays a wide range of instruments. Basically, looking at their basic characteristics, these activities fall into five major sets: Material aid (humanitarian aid, reconstruction), information (through training, advice), non-physical support (e.g. social work, psychological aid, facilitation of dialogue etc.), law (transitional justice) and again force, namely when changes were enforced by police or military in the international protectorates. A sixth which only was found very occasionally in the survey was civil disobedience.

⁴⁰³ I differ here from Ryan who assumes that the target group of peace-building are the ‘ordinary people, and peace-building being about trying to build bridges between them (1995:129).

The different instruments used in the fourth macro-strategy (information, support, protest and advocacy) can likewise be summarised as being either information, material aid, immaterial support, protest, persuasion or law. Civil disobedience as an effective means to escalate protest has been very rare in the case study.

9.2.1.5 Summary

Table 6 on the next page, summarising what is said above, is a development from a chart by Ryan (1995:104) who distinguishes only problem, strategy and target group.

Table 6) Strategies of Conflict Intervention

	Peace-making	Peace-keeping	Peace-building	Public Information, Support, Protest and Advocacy
Problem	Perceived incompatibilities of interest	(Potential) violent behaviour	Destruction (material and immaterial/social) and lack of structures and relations necessary for sustainable peace with justice	a) Lack of knowledge about the events in the conflict b) Behaviour of other intervening actors
Function (s)	Finding a negotiated solution; dealing with the interests and positions of conflict parties	Control, prevent or reduce violence	Deal with the destructive processes that accompany war	Information
			Address relationships	Change the behaviour of intervening actors.
			Deal with structural issues
Frequency in conflict stages	Most frequent during escalated conflict; more rare before escalation to violence and after cease-fire	In all stages.	Most frequent after cease-fire but also much present during war; more rare in this case before war	Most frequent during war.
Target groups chosen by state actors	Governments, leaders	Military, armed forces	State and large categories of population	Governments
Target groups chosen by non-state actors	Mostly middle and grass-root level, rarely governments	Military, armed forces; violence-prone groups and individuals, death squads etc.	Both large categories of population (rarely state) and specific groups and locations	Governments, international organisations; 'society' in general, own constituency
Basic Character of	Law	Force	Material aid	Information
Instruments used	Negotiation	Nonviolent Deterrence and reference to international law	Information	Material Aid
	Force	Persuasion and relationship building	Immaterial support	Immaterial support
			Law	Protest
			Force	Persuasion
			(Civil disobedience)	Law
C.Schweitzer 2009, expanding on a model by Ryan 1995:104				(Civil disobedience)

9.3 The Role of Civil Society Actors in Conflict Intervention

In spite of the increased interest in civilian conflict intervention, there is still no full clarity or agreement on what the role of civil society actors in this field is (see Fischer 2008 for a recent summary on the debate, and Paffenholz and Spurk 2006). On the basis of the case studied here – that in many ways preceded this debate which only started around the end of the 1990s – the following observations can be made:

1. Civil society actors have been complementing the work of state actors in many ways.
 - They worked as their implementing partners (see the section on reconstruction in Chapter 7);
 - They took care of issues and needs that the state actors were not able to deal with and therefore were glad to delegate to civil society (e.g. doing social work in refugee camps, or many of the peace-building projects in the protectorates after the wars) for which governments rather financed NGOs than seeking to implement them themselves;
 - They often were those with the better grounded information since they worked at grassroots level and therefore often became welcome sources for information.
2. They were the avant-garde for approaches, strategies and local partners later pursued or sought out by state actors. This is particularly evident for much of the civil society support where non-state actors clearly came first and only later were joined by OSCE, UN and governments. But it is also true in general for most of what are now well-recognised instruments of civil conflict intervention (or post-war peace-building, or conflict prevention, or whatever the official terms used by governments and international organisations are). It was civil society that practised them first, and through setting positive examples ‘mainstreamed’ them.
3. In some cases, they have been able to control or correct actions by governments through advocacy or direct action (e.g. helping war evaders and bringing refugees to third countries).
4. The study supports the position taken recently by some researchers doing comparative studies of cases of conflict intervention regarding the limited role dialogue and reconciliation work by civil society actors plays for dealing with the overall conflicts (see Paffenholz and Spurk 2006, Paffenholz 2009a).⁴⁰⁴ The meagre impact that could be found regarding these efforts indicates that there is no strong relationship between these efforts and an overall positive change in society and prevention of future violence.

9.4 Some Final Thoughts

Looking back at the period studied, and the innumerable activities of state and non-state actors: Which way does the balance go? Was it worth the effort? On the positive side, it seems that the post-Yugoslav countries are moving towards a sustainable peace, and that in spite of still existing tensions and some serious problems ethnic minorities face, wars of the extent of the 1990s look more and more unlikely.

On the other side, was all the effort, and the vast amount of money spent on dealing with the conflicts of the area really necessary? Would not the same have been achieved with less, and doing less harm on the way? Would - as some people argue - financial aid in the 1980s have prevented all the wars? Would a different international response in 1991 have changed things? Would a quicker and more decisive military action in Bosnia-Herzegovina have ended the war earlier, and more pressure on FR Yugoslavia to let Kosovo go prevented the war there? What would have happened if there had been a conscious effort to limit intervention to nonviolent instruments? Much has been written in favour of these options, but as far as I know nobody so far has really systematically worked on such an alternative or counterfactual history.⁴⁰⁵ Also this study here cannot fill this gap but can only remark that it may be worth a study of its own.

It is today fashionable to point out that civil society is nothing good per se, but as Barnes (2005:9) put it civil society groups “can be a factor in war as well as a force for peace”, a point also quoted by Fischer (2008:241) and raised by Fisher and

⁴⁰⁴ On this issue, the publication of a comparative study led by Paffenholz (2009b) is announced whose findings have been preliminary summarized in Paffenholz 2009a

⁴⁰⁵ There are tools developed in social sciences for such judgements on unreal (potential) developments. See Horsky 1968 and Mueller 1995:34pp.

Zimina (2008). The long and perhaps discouraging list of problems above under the heading of ‘doing harm’ certainly emphasises this point. If I were to formulate just one lesson from this case study it would be to say that everybody who starts working on a conflict – be it in his/her own country or in another country – starts immediately to become an actor involved in it, and thereby begins to share in the responsibility for whatever happens next. This is something that sometimes may be overlooked when regarding the huge discrepancies of resources and power between civil society and state actors, a discrepancy that in spite of more and more money going to civil society actors has not changed fundamentally. The challenge civil society actors – from large professional NGOs to small informal citizens’ groups – face is to become a ‘force for peace’. That goal can potentially be achieved, as this case study has illustrated. Perhaps the basic recipe is not that difficult after all: it is ‘put first analysis and listening to the local civil society, and then see if among the instruments you have available are some that are useful in the situation. If you do not have such instruments or are not familiar enough with them, then rather don’t get involved but share your analysis with others who have the capacity to play a useful role.’

Other than that, the warning needs to be expressed that as contexts are different, so successful programmes need to differ. What may ‘work’ in one context may be absolutely the wrong approach in the next one – that is one point about which almost all comparative studies and meta evaluations of conflict intervention agree (see Paffenholz and Spurk 2006, Schweitzer 2009). For that reason the findings of this study here must not be generalised too much. While many observations probably are rather general – as are the instruments – only future comprehensive studies on other countries and the role of civil society actors in their conflicts may in the end show which of the lessons and findings from this area are historical or geographical singular, and which are not.

Bibliography

- A Human Security Doctrine for Europe* (2004). The Barcelona Report of the Study Group on Europe's Security Capabilities. Barcelona
- 'A Nonthreatening Approach to Peace: The Community of Sant' Egidio in Mozambique' (2005) In People Building Peace II. Successful Stories of Civil Society. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, Brenk, Malin, Hellema, Marte and Verhoeven, Juliette. Utrecht: European Centre for Conflict Prevention:576-581
- Aall, Pamela (2001) 'What Do NGOs Bring to Peacemaking?' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 365-383
- Abbott, Chris (2005) Rights and Responsibilities. Resolving the Dilemma of Humanitarian Intervention. Oxford Research Group
- Abu-Nimer, Mohammed (2002) 'The Miracles of Transformation through Interfaith Dialogue: Are You a Believer?' In Interfaith Dialogue and Peacebuilding. ed. by Smock, David R. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press:15-32
- Ackerman, Seth and Naureckas, Jim (2000) 'Following Washington's Script: The United States Media and Kosovo.' In Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. ed. by Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. London: Pluto Press : 97-110
- Ackermann, Alice (2000) Making Peace Prevail. Preventing Violent Conflict in Macedonia. New York:Syracuse University Press
- . (2003) 'International Intervention in Macedonia. From Preventive Engagement to Peace Implementation.' In International Intervention in the Balkans since 1995, ed. by Siani-Davies, Peter. London/New York: Routledge:105-119
- ACT-Alliance for Conflict Transformation, Inc. (leaflet, without date)
- Adams, Mark and Bradbury, Mark (1995) Conflict and Development. Organisational Adaptation in Conflict Situations. An Oxfam Working Paper, Oxford:Oxfam
- Adams, Tim (2000) 'Mirko contest to raise mine awareness', First published in SFOR Informer #83, March 15 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/indexinf/83/mirko/t000317g.htm> [14.10.2002]
- Adelman, Howard (2002) 'Refugee Repatriation.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elizabeth M. Boulder. London: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 273-302
- 'Adressen und Kurzbeschreibungen von Friedensgruppen, die sich in Ex-Jugoslawien engagieren' (1996) In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:275-286
- AG KED (1996) 'Sanktionen – hohe Kosten, geringer Nutzen?' der ueberblick. Zeitschrift fuer oekumenische Begegnung und internationale Zusammenarbeit, No 2
- Agger, Inger, Vuk, S.and Mimica, Jadrenka (1995) Theory and practice of psycho-social projects under war conditions in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Croatia. Brussels: ECHO/ECTF.
- Agger, Inger, Jareg, Elizabeth, Herzberg, Anne, Mimica, Jadranka and Rebien, Claus C. (1999) Evaluation of Norwegian Support to Psycho-Social Projects in Bosnia-Herzegovina and the Caucasus. Final Evaluation Report Oslo: Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs
- AK Mir (n.d.) Unterstuetzung unabhaengiger Medien in Serbien und Kroatien. Stuttgart (c. 1993) (paper)

- AK Teststrecke, Oldenburg (n.d.) Krieg in Jugoslawien. Textsammlung zu Hintergruende, Analysen, Diskussion um militaerische Intervention, Gewaltfrei intervenieren. (brochure)
- Aktionsgemeinschaft Dienst fuer den Frieden (ed.) (2006) Zivil statt militaerisch-Erfahrungen mit ziviler, gewaltfreier Konfliktbearbeitung im Ausland. Bonn:AGDF
- . (ed.) (2008) Gewaltfrei streiten fuer einen gerechten Frieden. Plaedoyer fuer zivile Konflikttransformation. Oberursel: Publik-Forum Verlagsgesellschaft
- ‘Albaner jetzt offiziell Mazedonier’ (2001) die tageszeitung 17. November:11
- ‘Albaner raus aus Kosovo’(1988) die tageszeitung: 22. September: 3
- Albert Einstein Institution (2008) About AEI. [online] available from <<http://www.aeinstein.org/organizationsb494.html>> [22.7.2008]
- Albrecht, Ulrich (1999) ‘Nach-Denken ueber den Krieg.’ In Der Kosovo-Krieg. Fakten, Hintergruende, Alternativen. ed. by Albrecht,Ulrich and Schaefer, Paul Koeln:Papyrossa Verlag:9-17
- Albrecht,Ulrich and Schaefer, Paul (eds) (1999) Der Kosovo-Krieg. Fakten, Hintergruende, Alternativen. Koeln:Papyrossa Verlag
- Alpe Adria (1993) Medien gegen den Krieg. Vol 3, ed. Verein Villacher Friedenskomitee, Villach
- Allcock, John B.(2000) Explaining Yugoslavia. London :Hurst & Company
- American Bar Association (2008) About the American Bar Association. [online] available from <<http://www.abanet.org/about/>> [8.7.2008]
- Amir, Yehuda (1969) Contact Hypothesis in Ethnic Relations’. Psychological Bulletin (American Psychological Association), Vol 71, No 5, May:319-342
- ‘Amnestieangebot’ (2001) die tageszeitung 17. May: 11
- Amnesty International (2000) NATO/Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. ‘Collateral damage’ or unlawful killings? Violations of the Laws of War by NATO during Operation Allied Force. June 2000
- . (2004) Kosovo (Serbia and Montenegro). ‘So does it mean that we have the rights?’ Protecting the human rigths of women and girls trafficked for forced prostitution in Kosovo. AI Index:EUR 70/010/2004, 6 May. [online] available from <<http://web.amnesty.org/library/print/ENGEUR700102004> >[19.9.2005]
- ‘An der gemeinsamen Zukunft arbeiten’ (2001) die tageszeitung 1. October: 10
- Anastasijevic, Dejan (1997) ‘Belgrade or Bust’. Warreport No 48, January/February, 3-5
- Andersen, Knut B. (2000) Turkish aid to blind children. First published in SFOR Informer #88, May 24, 2000 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/cimic/zagreb/cimicro.htm> [16.10.2002]
- Anderson, Mary B. (1999) Do No Harm., How Aid Can Support Peace—or War Boulder/London: Lynne Rienner Pub.
- . (2001a) ‘Reflecting on the practice of outside assistance: Can we know what good we do?’ In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- . (2001b) ‘Humanitarian NGOs in Conflict Intervention.’ In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 637-648
- Anderson, Mary B. and Olson, Lara, with assistance from Kristin Doughty (2003) Confronting War: Critical Lessons for Peace Practitioners. CDA

- Angell, Stephen and Arnet, Mary (1998) 'Back to Croatia with AVP.' Peace Team News, ed. by Friends Peace Teams Project, c/ BYM, Sandy Spring, USA 3/3, Fall, 7-8
- Annual Meeting of the European Network Civil Peace Services in Dunblane* (2004) Scotland, 26.-30.March 2004 (notes of participant observation)
- Antikriegshaus Sievershausen (1995) 'Bericht der Aktion Direkte Hilfe.' In. Peaceful Settlement of Conflict II – A Task for Civil Society: Third Party Intervention, Dokumentation einer Tagung vom 16.-18. März 1994. ed. by Calließ, Joerg and Merkel, Christine M. Locomer Protokolle 9. Locom: Evangelische Akademie Locom:240-254
- Antiratna Kampanja Hrvatska (ed.) (1993) Rat i ljudska prava na prostoru bivše Jugoslavije. Dokumenti Amnesty Internationala i Helsinki Watcha od visestranačkih demokratskih izbora 1990 do rata u Bosni i Hercegovini. Zagreb:ARK
- Anti-War Campaign Croatia (1995) 'Anti-War-Campaign Croatia: Network, Member Organisations, Programmes and Projects.' In Peaceful Settlement of Conflict II – A Task for Civil Society: Third Party Intervention, Dokumentation einer Tagung vom 16.-18. März 1994. ed. by Calließ, Joerg and Merkel, Christine M. Locomer Protokolle 9. Locom: Evangelische Akademie Locom: 226-239
- 'Antreten zur Waffenernte' (2001) die tageszeitung 16.August: 1
- Aolain, Fionnuala Ni (2001) 'The Fractured Soul of the Dayton Peace Agreement: A Legal Analysis.' In Reconstructing Multiethnic Societies: The Case of Bosnia-Herzegovina. Sokolovic, Dzermal and Bieber, Florian. Aldershot and Burlington:Ashgate: 63-94
- Appleby, R. Scott (2001) 'Religion as an Agent of Conflict Transformation and Peacebuilding.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 821-840
- Apthorpe, Raymond (n.d.) 'Was international emergency relief aid in Kosovo 'humanitarian'?' Humanitarian Practice Network [online] available from <www.odihpn.org/report.asp?ID=2417> [18.11.2003]
- Arbeiterwohlfahrt (1994) Forum: Krieg und Kriegsfolgen. Zur Situation von Frauen aus dem ehemaligen Jugoslawien: Konzepte von Unterstützung, Begleitung, Berichterstattung. 15.-18.9.1994' (flyer)
- Arbeitsgemeinschaft Kriegsursachenforschung (AKUF) (2000) Das Kriegsgeschehen 1999. Daten und Tendenzen der Kriege und bewaffneten Konflikte, ed. by Rabehl, Thomas. Opladen: Leske und Budrich
- . (2004) Kriege-Archiv: Kriege und bewaffnete Konflikte seit 1945 [online] available from <http://www.sozialwiss.uni-hamburg.de/publish/Ipw/Akuf/kriege/200_kroatien-serbien.htm>; and <http://www.sozialwiss.uni-hamburg.de/publish/Ipw/Akuf/kriege/216_jugoslawien.htm> [25.11.2004]
- Arbeitsgemeinschaft Qualifizierung fuer zivile Konfliktbearbeitung/Zivilen Friedensdienst (1999) Friedensfachdienst ist machbar! Profis der zivilen Konfliktbearbeitung im Einsatz. Bonn: AG Qualifizierung
- Arbeitskreis antiimperialistische Solidaritaet-AKAS (ed.) (1995) Neuer Griff nach der Weltmacht. Die deutsche Interessenlage im Jugoslawien-Konflikt. Heidelberg
- Arbeitskreis Jugoslawienkonflikt (1995) Konfliktgebiet Ex-Jugoslawien, BILDpol. Das internat-magazin, Trier, January.
- Arbeitsstelle Friedensforschung Bonn, in Zusammenarbeit mit dem Planungsstab des Auwaertigen Amtes und der Hessischen Stiftung Friedens- und Konfliktforschung (1999) Programmorschlag fuer einen Laendergesprachskreis ueber Mazedonien am 18. Oktober 1999 im Auswaertigen Amt in Bonn. (Letter)

- ARCA – Associations and Resources for Conflict Management Skills (2008) Lessons Learned Report. Paths to Peace Education in Europe: Experiences, Lessons Learned and Opportunities. [online] available from <www.peacetraining.org> [7.7.2008]
- Arnautovic, Aldin (2002) 'Bosnia: SFOR Rights Violation Furore'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 388, 6. December
- . (2003a) 'Bosnia: Police Blamed for War Crimes'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 393, 3. January
- . (2003b) 'Cutting Karadzic's Fiancial Lifeline'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 404, 6. February
- Arnautovic, Marija (2004) 'Bosnia: Call For End to Sectarian Education'. IWPR Balkan Crisis Report No 501, 4.June
- Arnett, Mary (n.d.-a) 'Peacebuilding in Croatia Through AVP'. In Peace Team News. ed. by Friends Peace Teams Project, c/ BYM, Sandy Spring, USA 3/1, Spring,1-3
- . (n.d.-b) 'Quakers in Eastern Slavonia'. In Peace Team News, ed. by Friends Peace Teams Project, c/ BYM, Sandy Spring, USA, 2/3, Fall, 4-5
- Arnold, Martin (2001) Flugi zu Mazedonien als Vorwand fuer ganz andere Kriegsziele wie vor 2 Jahren, e-mail from Martin Arnold from 13.July to author (e-mail)
- Art, Robert J. and Cronin, Patrick M. (2007) 'Coercive Diplomacy'. In Leashing the Dogs of War. Conflict Management in a Divided World. ed. by Crocker, Chester A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aal, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 299-318
- AErzte ohne Grenzen (1999) KOSOVO: Erste systematische Erhebung ueber die Vertreibungen. Press Release 14/99.
- Assefa, Hizkias (2001) 'Reconciliation.' In Peace-building. A Field Guide. ed. by Reychler, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania. London/Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers:336-342
- Assefa, Hizkias (2004) 'The Challenge of Influencing Policy in Conflict Situations.' In NGOs at the Table. Strategies for Influencing Policies in Areas of Conflict. ed. by Fitzduff, Mari and Church, Cheyanne. Oxford et al: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers:45-56
- Assemblée des citoyens –HCA (ed.) (1992) Babel Yougoslavie, La Fracture. Juin 1992, No 5/6
- Atanasov, Peter (1994) 'A Peace to Keep'. Balkan War Report No 28, September, 22-23
- 'Auch Japan will fuer UdSSR nicht zahlen' (1990) die tageszeitung 6. July:11
- Auerbach, Doris (2004) Schreiben an Herrn Markus Spillmann, den Chefredaktor der Neuen Zuercher Zeitung [online] available from <http://www.politonline.ch/index.cfm?content=news&newsid=847> [7.5.2008]
- Aufruf zur Gewaltfreien Aktion am Sonntag, 18.4.99 am britischen Luftwaffenstuetzpunkt Brueggen b. Moenchengladbach, aus dem Bundesweiten Aktionsbuendnis Stop dem Krieg*. (Undated e-mail to author.)
- Austin, Alex, Fischer, Martina and Wils, Oliver (eds) (2003) 'Peace and Conflict Impact Assessment. Critical Views on Theory and Practice.' In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- Austrian Institute for Peace Research and Peace Education Stadtschlaining (1991) International Conference, November 13-17, 1991, in Stadtschlaining. (Conference program and correspondance.)
- Austrian Peace Service (n.d.) Report Austrian Peace Serivce. Sent toENCPS. (c.1991) (paper)

- Auswaertiges Amt - Arbeitsstab Humanitaere Hilfe (1993) Die humanitaere Hilfe der Bundesrepublik Deutschland fuer die Opfer des Konflikts im ehemaligen Jugoslawien. Bonn, 26.2.
- Auswaertiges Amt – Arbeitsstab Humanitaere Hilfe (1995) Jahresrueckblick 1995. Bonn: Auswaertiges Amt
- Auswaertiges Amt (1998) Deutsche Außenpolitik 1995. Auf dem Weg zu einer Friedensregelung fuer Bosnien und Herzegowina: 53 Telegramme aus Dayton. Eine Dokumentation. Bonn: Auswaertiges Amt
- . (1999) Zum Stabilitaetspakt fuer Suedosteuropa. 9.April. [online] available from <www.auswaertiges-amt.de/archiv/inf/2Dkos/hintergr./stabdt.htm> [8.11.2002]
- . (2004) Laenderinformationen, Eintraege zu Kroatien, Slowenien, Mazedonien, Serbien und Montengro, Bosnien und Herzegowina. [online] available from <http://www.auswaertiges-amt.de/www/de/laenderinfos/index_html> [2.5.2004]
- Azar,Edward (1990) The Management of Protracted Social Conflict: Theory and Cases. Aldershot: Ashgate
- B92 (2007) Editor-in-chief receives death threat. [online] available from http://www.b92.net/eng/news/comments.php?nav_id=42936 [7.5.2008]
- Babic, Stoja (2001) 'The Political Economy of Adjustment to Sanctions: The Case of Serbia.' In The Effects of Economic Sanctions: the Case of Serbia. ed. by Zucconi, Mario. Milano:75-111
- Bacic, Roberta (1999) Full text of the peace document. 11 June. (e-mail)
- Baechler, Guenther (2004) 'Conflict Transformation Through State Reform.' In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- . (2002) 'Civilian Conflict Resolution in the Context of International Peace Promotion in the 1990s.' In Promoting Peace. The Role of Civilian Conflict Resolution. ed. by Baechler, Guenther. Berne:Staempfli Publishers: 1-21
- . (ed.) (2002) Promoting Peace. The Role of Civilian Conflict Resolution. Berne:Staempfli Publishers
- Baglioni, Simone (2001) 'Solidarity Movement Organizations: Toward a Active Global Consciousness?' In Political Altruism? Solidarity Movements in International Perspective. ed. by Guigni, Marco and Passy, Florence. Lanham: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers: 219 -234
- Bajic, Zeljko (2000) 'NATO Brawling Upsets Macedonians'. IWPR'S Balkan Crisis Report No 134, 20. April
- Bajtarevic, Mirsad and Jelacic, Nerma (2004) 'Ashdown Celebrates Lonely Anniversary'. Balkan Crisis Report No 490, 2. April
- Balkan Peace Team (1994) Appartments – the Floor for Human Rights Struggle, Otvorene Oci / Balkan Peace Team, 24. August.
- . (1995) Presentation of Otvorene Oci. The Croatian Branch of the Balkan Peace Team. Presented at the Helsinki Citizens' Assembly in Tuzla, 21 October 1995
- . (1996a) Otvorene Oci Bi-Annual Field Report. An Update to the Report of November, 1995. May.
- . (1996b) The Reintegration of the Serb-held Areas of United Nations Protected Area West, Six Months After. A Comprehensive Report by Otvorene Oci

-
- . (1996c) War Crimes: A Fair Trial? Otvorene Oci / Balkan Peace Team Special Report, 27 April. [online] available from <http://www.peacebrigades.org/archive/bpt.html> [2.5.2007]
- . (1996d) The Protection of National Monuments. Otvorene Oci / Balkan Peace Team Special Report, 26 April. [online] available from <http://www.peacebrigades.org/archive/bpt.html> [2.5.2007]
- . (1996e) Mining of Houses in Former Sector South. Otvorene Oci / Balkan Peace Team Special Report, 10 June. [online] available from <http://www.peacebrigades.org/archive/bpt.html> [2.5.2007]
- . (1996/1997) Protests in Belgrade and throughout Yugoslavia—1996/1997. From the Balkan Peace Team, Belgrade, 10 December 1996 and, part II, 23 January 1997. [online] available from <<http://www.hartford-hwp.com/archives/62/063.html>> [16.7.2008]
- . (1997) Legal Eviction Attempt Fails in Split. Otvorene Oci / Balkan Peace Team Special Report, 26 February. [online] available from <<http://www.peacebrigades.org/archive/bpt.html>> [2.5.2007]
- . (1999) CC-Minutes Saturday Afternoon. (minutes)
- . (2000) Minutes of the General Assembly, 18.-19.11.2000 in Bonn. (minutes)
- . (2001) Newsletter No 22
- Balkan Peace Team Coordinating Committee (1998) Statement of the Coordinating Committee of Balkan Peace Team about the evaluation presented by Marie Caraj and Fernando Nicasio for the International Council of Peace Brigades International. December. (paper)
- Balkan Peace Team France (2001) 'BPT France suit les traces des équipes BPT.' Balkan Peace Team Newsletter No 22
- . (2002a) Un point sur l'Ibar. Bimestriel du BPT France – Équipes de paix dans les Balkans, No 3
- . (2002b) Un point sur l'Ibar. Bimestriel du BPT France – Équipes de paix dans les Balkans, No 4
- 'Balkankonferenz in Tirana beendet' (1990) die tageszeitung 26. October:8
- 'Balkankonflikt.' In Enzyklopaedie Online [online] available from <<http://www.infomia.com/wiki,index,edit,Balkankonflikt.html>> [10.12.2004]
- 'Balkan-Laender wollen jeden Streit vermeiden' (1988). die tageszeitung 24. February:7
- Balkans Peace and Integration Project (1992a) Municipal Peace Conference, Skopje, November 5-8, 1992. Dated 7 September. (Information sheet)
- . (1992b) Citizens' and Municipal Peace Conference, Ohrid, 5-8 November 1992, Die Beziehungen zwischen den Kirchen im ehemaligen Jugoslawien. (information sheet)
- Ball, Nicole (2001) 'The Challenge of Rebuilding War-Torn Societies.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 719-736
- Bamat, Thomas and Cejka, Mary Ann (2003) 'Introduction: Invisible Artisans of Peace.' In Artisans of Peace. Grassroots Peacemaking among Christian Communities. ed. by Cejka, Mary Ann and Bamat, Thomas. Maryknoll: Orbis Books: 1-18
- Banton, Michael (2001) 'Progress in Ethnic and Racial Studies.' Ethnic and Racial Studies Vol 24, No 2, 2 March, 173-194
- Barker, Michael (2005) Manufacturing policies: the media's role in the policy making process. Paper presented to the Journalism Education Conference, Frifith University, 29

- November – 2 December 2005. [online] available from <<http://live-wirez.gu.edu.au/jea.papers/Barker.doc>> [10.6.2008]
- Barnes, Catherine (2005) 'Weaving the Web: Civil Society Roles in Working with Conflict and Building Peace.' In People Building Peace II. Successful Stories of Civil Society. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, Brenk, Malin, Hellema, Marte and Verhoeven, Juliette. Utrecht: European Centre for Conflict Prevention:7-24
- Barnett, Neil (2003) 'Balkans Facing Uncertain Future.' Jane's Intelligence Review May, 49-60
- Barry, Robert (2001) 'Bosnia and Herzegovina: Status Report.' In The Operational Role of the OSCE in South-Eastern Europe. Contributing to regional stability in the Balkans. ed. by Ghebali, Victor-Ives and Warner, Daniel. Aldershot: Ashgate:20-29
- Barth, Fredrik (1969) 'Introduction.' In Ethnic Groups and Boundaries. ed. by Barth, Fredrik. Reprint. Bergen: Univ.-Forl.:9-38
- Bassin, Heidi (1999) 'Einsatz fuer Fortbildung und Frischobst...' Friedensdienst 4, 21-22
- Bauer, Alois and Muller, Marc (1996) 'Pax-Christi-Freiwilligeneinsatze im fruheren Jugoslawien.' In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein: Komzi-Verlag:157-163
- Baumgartner, Ilse and Baumgartner, Wolfgang (1997) Der Balkan-Krieg der 90er: Fakten, Hintergruende, Analysen, Zukunftsperspektiven Berlin: Verlag fuer Wissenschaft und Forschung
- Bax, Mart (2000) 'Warlords, priests and the politics of ethnic cleansing: a case-study from rural Bosnia Herzegovina.' Ethnic and Racial Studies Vol 23, No1, January, 16-36
- Baylis, John and Smith, Steve (eds) (1997) The Globalization of World Politics. An Introduction to International Relations. Oxford: Oxford University Press
- Bazzocchi, Claudio (2000) 'Società civile in Bosnia-Erzegovina.' Osservatorio sui Balcani [online] available from <<http://www.unimondo.org/balcani/guidet/societa/bosnia.html>> [24.6.2003]
- . (2001) 'Riunificare Mostar': il caso EUAM 1994-1996.' Osservatorio sui Balcani, Novembre
- Beati i costruttori di pace (1992) Solidarity for Peace in Sarajevo. (leaflet)
- . (1993) Projektvorschlag: Einrichtung eines multi-ethnischen Radios in Bosnien-Herzegowina, von Beati i costruttori di pace. Mit Anschreiben von Christine Schweitzer an 'Jugoslawien'-Koordinierungskreis, 12. February (paper)
- . (1999) 'I am going to Pristina and Belgrade' An Italian civil society Peace Corps. (Email to author, received 19.4.1999)
- Beaver, Paul (n.d.) 'Whose Wapons are Fueling the Bosnian War?', Jane's Defense column. (c.1994) Jane's Defence Weekly (printout without further source)
- Becker, David (2004) 'Dealing With the Consequences of Organized Violence in Trauma Work.' In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- Becker, Peter (1991) 'Das Krisenmanagement von EG und KSZE.' Blaetter fuer deutsche und internationale Politik (8) 943-946
- Becker-Hinrichs, Dietrich (1999) 'Lehre vom gerechten Krieg als antimilitaristischer Sprengstoff.' In Aktiv Gewaltfrei. Mitteilungen der Werkstatt fuer Gewaltfreie Aktion Baden, Nr 12/November 1999:1-2

- Beham, Mira (2001) 'Wie Medien zur Kriegerrechtfertigung beitragen', friedensforum 1, 30-33
- Behram, Mirsad and Jelacic, Nerma (2003) 'Bosnia: Mostar Future in Ashdown's Hands'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 455, 21. August
- Behrens, Wolfhard (2002) 'Wirtschaftlicher Wiederaufbau im Rahmen des Stabilitaetspaktes durch das Bundesministerium fuer wirtschaftliche Zusammenarbeit und Entwicklung.' In Deutsche Konfliktbewaeltigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 127-138
- Bekkering, Dave (1997) 2nd edn. The World of Bosnian-Herzegovinian NGOs. An Introduction into the World of B&H NGOs and B&H NGO Assistance. Gornji Vakuf: UNDP [online] available from <<http://www.ddh.nl/org/gvakuf/unov-rep/index.html>> [20.6.2003]
- . (2000) 'Balkan Peace Team International in Croatia: Otvorene Oci (Open Eyes).' In Nonviolent Intervention Across Borders. A Recurrent Vision. ed. by Moser-Puangsuwan, Yeshua and Weber, Thomas. Honolulu: Spark M. Matsunaga Institute for Peace: 191-206
- 'Belgrad hebt Preisbindung auf' (1988) die tageszeitung: 5.8.:6
- 'Belgrad ohne Regierung' (1989) die tageszeitung: 2. January:6
- Belloni, Roberto (2000) 'Building Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina.' Human Rights Working Papers No 2, Denver: Graduate School of International Studies, University of Denver [online] available from <<http://www.du.edu/humanrights/workingpapers/02-belloni-01-00.pdf>> [14.6.2003]
- . (2001) 'Blaming the Victims? The Challenge of Minority Return in Bosnia-Herzegovina.' Human Rights Working Papers No. 13, Denver: Graduate School of International Studies, University of Denver, 2001 [online] available from <<http://www.du.edu/humanrights/workingpapers/13-belloni-03-01.pdf>> [14.6.2003]
- Benderly, Jill (1999) Star Kosovo Women's Fund of World Learning. Field Report. 24 May
- Benderly, Jill and Kraft, Evan (eds) (1997) Independent Slovenia. Origins, Movements, Prospects. Houndsmills and London: Macmillan Press
- Benedek, Wolfgang (2001) 'Beobachtung und Foerderung der Menschenrechte.' In Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung. Eine internationale Herausforderung. Schriftenreihe des OESFK-Studien fuer europaeische Friedenspolitik vol 8. ed by Mader, Gerald, Eberwein, Wolf-Dieter and Vogt, Wolfgang R. Muenster: agenda Verlag: 208-228
- Bennett, Chris (1996) 'Voting Early, Voting Often'. Warreport No 46, October, 5
- Bennett, Christopher (1998) 'Voting for Fear'. Transitions Vol 5, No 8, August, 24-27
- Bercovitch, Jacob (1984) Social Conflicts and Third Parties: Strategies of Conflict Resolution. Boulder: Westview Press
- . (1995) 'Mediation in der Staatenwelt. Bedingungen fuer Erfolg oder Scheitern internationaler Vermittlungsbemuehungen.' In Friedliche Konfliktbearbeitung in der Staaten- und Gesellschaftswelt. ed. by Ropers, Norbert and Debiel, Tobias. Bonn: Stiftung Entwicklung und Frieden: 89-111
- . (ed.) (1996) Resolving International Conflicts: The Theory and Practice of Mediation. Boulder/CO: Lynne Rienner
- . (2002) 'International Mediation. Empirical Research and the State of the Art.' In Promoting Peace. The Role of Civilian Conflict Resolution. Ed. by Baechler, Guenther. Berne: Staempfli Publishers: 39 -59

- Bercovitch, Jacob, Anagnoson, J. Theodore and Wille, Donnette L. (1997) 'Some Conceptual Issues and Empirical Trends in the Study of Successful Mediation in International Relations.' Journal of Peace Research Vol 28, no1, 7-17
- Berdi, Vally (1996) 'HELP YU – Eine spontane Idee mit langer Wirkung.' In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:199-202
- Bergner, Gilles (1998) 'A presentation of CIMIC'. First published in SFOR Informer #31, March 11, 1998 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/cimic/introduction/cimic.htm> [16.10.2002]
- Berndt, Hagen (1996) 'Freiwillige Friedensdienste im ehemaligen Jugoslawien.' In Kleine Inseln der Menschenwuerde. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im ehemaligen Jugoslawien. ed. by Bildungs- und Begegnungsstaette fuer gewaltfreie Aktion e.V. and Christlicher Friedensdienst e.V. Kassel:Verlag Weber, Zucht & Co:9-17
- Berndt, Hagen (Kurve Wustrow) - interview July 2001
- Bernecker, Arabelle (2001) Internationales Konfliktmanagement am Beispiel des Krieges um Bosnien, 1992-1995. Frankfurt a. Main: Peter Lang
- Berretti Bianchi (1994) THE PEACE EMBASSY:definition, tasks and guidelines. [online] available from <<http://www.berrettibianchi.org/oldsite/progetti/peace-embassy.htm>> [7.7.2008]
- . (1999) Berretti Bianchi Onlus - Ambasciata di pace di Belgrado Estate 1999. [online] available from <<http://www.berrettibianchi.org/oldsite/progetti/relazione-estate-99.htm>> [7.7.2008]
- . (2000) Assemblea Nazionale dei BERRETTI BIANCHI ONLUS. Viareggio, 13-14 maggio 2000. [online] available from <<http://www.berrettibianchi.org/oldsite/associazione/assemblea-13may00.htm>> [7.7.2008]
- Berridge, G.R. (2002) 2nd edn. Diplomacy. Theory and Practice. Houndsmill/New York: Palgrave
- Bertelsmann Foundation (2002) Integrating the Balkans. Regional Ownership and European Responsibilities. Conference Report of the Round Table, Berlin, July 15-16, 2002. (paper)
- Bertelsmann Wissenschaftsstiftung (1999a) Ein politischer Interimsrahmen fuer den Kosovo-Konflikt. Guetersloh/Muenchen:Bertelsmann
- . (1999b) Einladung zum Brainstorming 'Staerkung von Demokratie und Zivilgesellschaft in der Krisenregion des Balkan', 2.6.1999 in Bonn
- Besemer, Christoph (1993) Mediation: Vermittlung in Konflikten. Heidelberg/Freiburg/Koenigstein:Werkstatt fuer Gewaltfreie Aktion Baden
- Besprechung ueber das Projekt Vis in Zaglav, 1.-4.8.1992. Minutes. Graz 1.September.
- 'Bettelmarsch' gegen drohende Abschiebung' (1990) die tageszeitung 12. January:3
- Betts, Richard K. (2001) 'The Delusion of Impartial Intervention.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 285-294
- Bieber, Florian and Daskalovski, Zidas (eds) (2003) Understanding the War in Kosovo. London/Portland: Frank Cass Publishers
- Biermann, Rafael (2002) 'Der kuenftige Status Kosovos. Vorbereitung auf das Unvermeidliche.' Internationale Politik 9, 51-58.
- Biermann, Rafael (ed.) (2002) Deutsche Konfliktbewaeltigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft

- Biermann, Wolfgang and Ugland, Ole Frederik (1998) 'Lessons Learned in the Field. A Survey of UNPROFOR Officers'. In UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations in a Civil War-like Conflict. ed. by Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin. Hants/Brookfield:Ashgate: 81-122
- Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin (eds.) (1998) UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations in a Civil War-like Conflict. Hants/Brookfield:Ashgate
- Bildt, Carl (1998) Peace Journey. The Struggle for Peace in Bosnia. London:Weidenfeld and Nicolson
- Bildungs- und Begegnungsstaette fuer gewaltfreie Aktion e.V./Christlicher Friedensdienst e.V.(eds) Kleine Inseln der Menschenwuerde. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im ehemaligen Jugoslawien Kassel:Verlag Weber, Zucht & Co
- Bilides, David (2003) Search for Common Ground in Macedonia. [online] available from <www.dance.demon.co.uk/AGC/Articles/CommonGroundMac.html> and <www.dance.demon.co.uk/AGC/Articles/CommonGroundDetails.html> [16.12.2004]
- Biserko, Sonja (1997) 'Serbian Nationalism Rising'. Warreport No 55, October, 3-4
- Bjork, James and Goodman, Allan E. (1993) Yugoslavia, 1991-92: Could Diplomacy Have Prevented a Tragedy? Washington:Pew Case Studies in International Affairs
- Bjorken, Johanna (1992) Statement of the Balkan Dialogue Group. New York, May 1992-Present (paper)
- Blix, Tom Christian (1999) A paint-brush can be more stabilising than a gun. First published in SFOR Informer #72,13 Oct,1999 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/humanitarian/paint-brush/t991017.htm> [16.10.2002]
- Bloomfield, David (1997) Peacemaking Strategies in Northern Ireland. Building Complementarity in Conflict Management Theory. New York: Palgrave Macmillan
- Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix (2001) The Berghof Handbook for Conflict Transformation. Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- Blum, Oma Tamches (1999) 'Voices for Women – Forces for Change: Building Peace in the Bosnian Community.' In Three Dimensions of Peacebuilding in Bosnia. Findings from USIP-Sponsored Research and Field Projects. Peaceworks 32, 27-31. ed. by Riskin, Steven M. December [online] available from <www.uip.org/pubs/peaceworks/pwks32.pdf> [25.6.2003]
- Boarov, Dimitrije and Sunter, Daniel (2002) 'Serbia: Labus to Contest Presidency'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 352, 24. July
- Boehm, Christopher (1984) Blood Revenge. The Anthropology of Feuding in Montenegro and Other Tribal Societies. Kansas: University Press
- Boehm, Beata (2001) 'Hilfe beim Wiederaufbau und Stabilisierung der wirtschaftlichen Strukturen – das Pakrac-Projekt'. In Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung. Eine internationale Herausforderung. Schriftenreihe des Oesterreichischen Studienzentrums fuer Frieden und Konfliktloesung-OESFK (ed.), Studien fuer europaeische Friedenspolitik Band 8, Muenster:agenda Verlag: 180-207
- Bojicic, Vesna and Kaldor, Mary (1999) 'The 'Abnormal' Economy of Bosnia-Herzegovina.' In Scramble for the Balkans: Nationalism, Globalism and the Political Economy of Reconstruction. ed. by Schierup, Carl-Ulrik London:Macmillan Press Ltd: 92-117

- Bojicic-Dzelilovic, Vesna (2001) 'International Aid Policies- A Review of the Main Issues.' In International Support Policies to SEE Countries – Lessons (not) learned in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Sarajevo, August. ed. by Fond Otvoreno Drustvo Bosne I Hercegovine:188-198. [online] available from <<http://www.soros.org.ba/en/dokumenti/ostali/book/>>[8.11.2003]:
- Bole, William, Christiansen, Drew and Hennemeyer, Robert T. (2004) Forgiveness in International Politics an Alternative Road to Peace. United States Conference of Catholic Bishops
- Bom, Bert (1993) 'City Twinning. Rebuilding a Village in Eastern Slavonia'. hCa newsletter 6, Winter, 21
- Bongard, Christoph (2004) 'Ich habe die Kraft etwas zu veraendern'. Peacebuilding in Nachkriegsgesellschaften. Evaluation eines Friedensprojekts in Kroatien. Unpublished diploma thesis, University Viadrine, Frankfurt/Oder
- 'Bonn soll UCK-Kaempfer ausgeruestet haben' (1998) Frankfurter Rundschau 25. September
- 'Bonner Innenpolitik in Jugoslawien: 2000 Paesse vorsorglich entzogen' (1989) die tageszeitung 13. May:6
- Borden, Anthony (2000) 'First Steps of Freedom'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 184, 10. October
- . (2001) 'Milosevic's Fate in the Balance'. IWPR'S Balkan Crisis Report No 232, 31.March
- . (2002) 'Scramble at the Council'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 349, 10.July
- Borden, Anthony and Hedl, Drago (1996) 'How the Bosnians Were Broken. Twenty-one Days at Dayton: A Special Report'. Warreport No 39, February/March, 26-42
- Bose, Sumantra (2002) Bosnia after Dayton. Nationalist Partition and International Intervention. New York: Oxford University Press
- . (2003) 'Mostar. International Intervention in a Divided Bosnian Town, 1994-2001.' In International Intervention in the Balkans since 1995, ed. by Siani-Davies, Peter. London/New York: Routledge:68-87
- 'Bosnia Special: Ashdown Furore' (2003) IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 447, 23. July
- 'Bosnia: Ashdown Reigns in Bosnian Serbs' (2003) by IWPR staff in London. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 420, 8. April
- Botes, Johannes (2003) What is 'Conflict Transformation'?. International Journal of Peace Studies, Vol 8/no 2, Autumn/Winter, 3-27
- Botta, Martin (1998) 'Was ein einzelner durchaus bewirken kannn...' FriedensDienst 6, 98:25-28
- Boucheboubou, Leila (1999) Le Monténégro dans les crises yougoslaves, 20 mai 1999. Collèges d'Europe À Natolin (Bruges) (conference paper)
- Bougarel, Xavier (1999) 'Zur OEkonome des Bosnien-Konflikts: zwischen Raub und Produktion.' In OEkonome der Buergerkrieg. ed. by Jean, François and Rufin, Jean-Christophe. Hamburg: Hamburger Edition: 191-218
- Boutros-Ghali, Boutros (1992) An Agenda For Peace. Preventive Dipomacy, Peacemaking and Peacekeeping. Report of the Secretary-General pursuant to the statement adopted by the Summit Meeting of the Security Council on 31 January 1992. New York: United Nations
- . (1995) 2nd edn. 'Supplement to an Agenda for Peace: position paper of the Secretary-General on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations.' In Agenda for Peace. Boutros-Ghali, Boutros. New York: United Nations

- Bozicevic, Goran (1997) Closing down Volunteer Project Pakrac. Zagreb 21. February, Antiwar Campaign Croatia. [Online] available from <www.ddh.nl/org/pakrac/stop.html> [1.12.2003]
- Brahimi-Commission (2000) Report to the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations. 17. August 2000. New York: UN Security Council
- Brajkovic, Zoran (2007) 'The Potential of Inter-Religious Dialogue.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed. by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin: Lit Verlag Fischer: 185-214
- Brandhuber, Wolfgang (1994) 'Eindrücke über das Leben im Flüchtlingslager, Veli Žoze' in Kroatien.' In Friedens- statt Militäreinsätze. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im Aufwind. ed. by Pax Christi. Probleme des Friedens 2-3. Idstein: Pax Christi : 86-90
- Braun, Reiner (ed.) (2000) Der Balkan-Krieg – Analyse eines Exempels. Lehren aus dem Krieg im Kosovo. Witten/Dortmund: pad-Verlag
- Bremer, Thomas (1996) 'Initiativen von Pax-Christi-International zum ‚Jugoslawien‘-Krieg.' In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit für den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. By Pax Christi. Idstein: Komzi-Verlag: 175-180
- Briza, Jan (2003) 'Serbia's US Dilemma'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 437, 14. June
- Bromley, Mark K. and Sali-Terzic, Sevima (1999) 'Supporting Reconciliation and Human Rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina through Legal Outreach.' In Three Dimensions of Peacebuilding in Bosnia. Findings from USIP-Sponsored Research and Field Projects. Peaceworks 32, 22-26. ed. by Riskin, Steven M. December [online] available from <www.uip.org/pubs/peaceworks/pwks32.pdf> [25.6.2003]
- Broughton, Sally, Fraenkel, Eran (2002) 'Macedonia: Extreme Challenges for the 'Model' of Multiculturalism.' In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette Boulder: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 248-279
- Brunner, Roland (2001) Eine Brücke der Solidarität: Freiwilligeneinsatz im Kosovo®. (Press release, Email dated 10. April)
- Brusis, Martin, with Wim van Meurs (1999) Ethnopolitische Konflikte in Osteuropa: Probleme und Strategien. München: CAP Working Paper
- Bryant, Lee (1993) 'Chronology of the Battle for Bosnia'. Balkan War Report No 21, August/September, 8-10
- Bryant, Lee and Loza, Tihomir (2002) 'Expectations & Realities.' In With no Peace to Keep. United Nations Peacekeeping and the Wars in Former Yugoslavia. ed. by Stamkoski, George. 2nd edn. London: Volatile Media: 96-116
- Buchbender, Ortwin and Arnold, Gerhard (eds) (2002) Kämpfen für die Menschenrechte. Der Kosovo-Konflikt im Spiegel der Friedensethik. Schriften der Akademie der Bundeswehr für Information und Kommunikation. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft
- Buchmayer, Stefan (1998) 'Ein Jahr Friedensdienst in Serbien.' FriedensDienst 6, 11-12
- Buckley, Mary (2001) 'Russian Perceptions.' In Kosovo. Perceptions of War and its Aftermath. ed. by Buckley, Mary and Cummings, Sally N. London: continuum: 156-175
- Buckley, Mary and Cummings, Sally N. (eds.) (2001) Kosovo. Perceptions of War and its Aftermath. London: continuum
- Buckley, Mary and Cummings, Sally N. (2001) 'Introduction.' In Kosovo. Perceptions of War and its Aftermath. eds. by Buckley, Mary and Cummings, Sally N. London: continuum: 1-11

- Buckley-Zistel, Susanne (2005) "'The Truth Heals'?" Gacaca Jurisdictions and the Consolidation of Peace in Rwanda'. Die Friedens-Warte Bd 80, Vol 1-2, 113-129
- . (2007) Handreichung Transitional Justice. Berlin: Plattform Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung
- Buettner, Christian W. (1995) Friedensbrigaden: Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung mit gewaltfreien Methoden. Muenster:Lit Verlag
- Building the Skills for Peace, Peace Institute Convenes Workshop on Coexistence in a Multiethnic society*. E-mail forwarded by Howard Clark, 7.July. (E-mail to author)
- Bujosevic, Dragan and Radovanovic, Ivan (2003) The Fall of Milosevic. The October 5th Revolution. New York:Palgrave Macmillan
- 'Bukoshi Warns of Dangers of 'Blind Trust'' (1995). Illyria No 367, 26.-29.January, 3
- Bull, Einar (2001) 'Opening Address.' In The Operational Role of the OSCE in South-Eastern Europe. Contributing to Regional Stability in the Balkans. ed. by Ghebali, Victor-Ives and Warner, Daniel. Aldershot:Ashgate:X1-XV
- 'Bund darf fuehren' (2001) die tageszeitung 27. September:8
- Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung (1992) Unterstuetzung der Antikriegsarbeit im ehemaligen Jugoslawien. 22.October. (paper)
- . (1993) Unterstuetzung von Antikriegsgruppen im ehemaligen Jugoslawien. (paper)
- . (1995) Adressen von Friedens-, Frauen- und Menschenrechtsorganisationen im ehemaligen Jugoslawien. (paper)
- . (n.d.-a) Arbeit gegen den Krieg im ehemaligen Jugoslawien – Projekte und Projektvorschlaege. (c. 1993) (paper)
- . (n.d.-b) Ein Obdach fuer Fluechtlinge aus Bosnien-Herzegowina. (c. summer 1992) (paper)
- . (n.d.-c) Das Engagement des Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung e.V. im 'Jugoslawien'-Konflikt. (c. 1993) (paper)
- Bundesministerium der Verteidigung (1998) Folgeoperation SFOR. Informationen ueber die Beteiligung der Bundeswehr an der Stabilisierung des Friedens im ehemaligen Jugoslawien, Stichworte fuer die OEffentlichkeitsarbeit und Truppeninformation. Bonn: BMVG
- Bundesministerium des Inneren (1994) Das Bundesministerium des Inneren teilt mit: Bundesinnenminister Manfred Kanther und sein kroatischer Amtskollege Ivan Jarnjak haben heute in Bonn ein Abkommen zwischen der Regierung der Bundesrepublik Deutschland und der Regierung der Republik Kroatien ueber die Rueckuebernahme von deutschen und kroatischen Staatsangehoerigen unterzeichnet. 25. April, Bonn (press release)
- . (1996) An die Innenminister/-Senatoren der Laender, betr. Abkommen zwischen der Regierung der Bundesrepublik Deutschland und eer Regierung der Bundesrepublik Jugoslawien ueber die Rueckfuehrung und Rueckuebernahme von ausreisepflichtigen deutschen und jugoslawischen Staatsangehoerigen vom 10. Oktober 1996, 21.Oktober. Bonn:BMI
- Bundesministerium fuer wirtschaftliche Zusammenarbeit und Entwicklung (2001) Hauptbericht ueber die Evaluierung. Aufbau des Zivilen Friedensdienstes Phase 1, Bonn, July (draft paper)
- . (2004) BMZ-Diskurs. Zum Verhaeltnis von entwicklungspolitischen und militaerischen Antworten auf neue sicherheitspolitische Herausforderungen. Ein Diskussionspapier des BM.Z No 1, May. Bonn:BMZ

- . (2008) Auf dem Weg in die Eine Welt. Weißbuch zur Entwicklungspolitik. 13. Entwicklungspolitische Bericht, June. [online] available from <<http://www.bmz.de/de>> [17.11.2008]
- Buendnis 90-Die Gruenen (1996) Ergebnisse der Delegationsreise der Bundestagsfraktion nach Bosnien-Herzegowina, by Kerstin Mueller, Amke Dietert-Scheuer und Helmut Lippelt, Bonn, 20.March. (paper)
- Buendnis 90-Die Gruenen Bundestagsfraktion (2001) 'Materialsammlung zum zweiten Jahrestag der militaerischen Intervention der NATO im ehemaligen Jugoslawien.' lang & schluessig 14/28, March
- Buntenbach, Annelie and Lemke, Steffi (1999) Bericht einer Reise nach Serbien, Montenegro und in den Kosovo, 21. bis 28. August 1999. Berlin, 12. November 1999 (paper)
- Bunstift (1995) Tagung 'Friedenspolitische Perspektiven im ehemaligen Jugoslawien'. 17./18. November 1995 in Goettingen. (Programme of the conference and inviting letter)
- Burg, Steven L. and Shoup, Paul S. (1999) The War in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ethnic Conflict and International Intervention. New York:M.E.Sharpe
- Burgess, M. Elaine (1978) 'The Resurgence of Ethnicity: Myth or Reality?' Ethnic and Racial Studies Vol 1, No 3, July
- Burmester, Hans-Peter (1994) 'Was tun auf dem Balkan? István Bibó und die Kunst des guten Friedensschlusses heute.' Loccumer Protokolle 70/93, Rehburg-Loccum
- Buro, Andreas (1992) 'Was macht eigentlich die Friedensbewegung fuer Jugoslawien?' friedensforum 1, 26-27
- . (1997) Totgesagte leben laenger: Die Friedensbewegung. Von der Ost-West-Konfrontation zur zivilen Konfliktbearbeitung. Idstein:Komzi Verlag
- Burrowes, Robert J. (1996) The Strategy of Nonviolent Defense. A Gandhian Approach. Albany:New York Press
- . (2000) 'Toward a Comprehensive Typology.' In Nonviolent Intervention Across Borders. A Recurrent Vision. ed. by Moser-Puangsuwan, Yeshua and Weber, Thomas. Honolulu: Spark M. Matsunaga Institute for Peace: 45-72
- . (2000) 'The Persian Gulf War and the Gulf Peace Team'. In Nonviolent Intervention Across Borders. A Recurrent Vision. ed. by Moser-Puangsuwan, Yeshua and Weber, Thomas. Honolulu: Spark M. Matsunaga Institute for Peace: 305-316
- Burstein, Paul (1999) 'Social Movements and Public Policy.' In How Social Movements Matter. ed. by Guigni, Marco, McAdam, Doug and Tilly, Charles. Minneapolis/London: University of Minnesota Press: 3-21
- Burton, John W. (1987) Resolving Deep-Rooted Conflict: A Handbook. Lanham, UPA
- . (1990) Conflict: Resolution and Provention. London:Macmillan Press
- . (1997) Violence explained. The sources of conflict, violence and crime and their provention. Manchester:Manchester University Press
- . (ed.) (1990) Human Needs Theory. London:Macmillan
- Burton, John and Dukes, Frank (1990) Conflict: Practices in Management, Settlement and Resolution. Hampshire:Macmillan Press
- Busch, Thomas (1992) 'Eine beispielhafte Aktion belgischer Gemeinden: ,Causes Communes' – 'Gemeinsame Sache''. Alpe Adria Alternativ 4/92:10
- Bush, Kenneth (1998) A measure of peace: peace and conflict impact assessment (PCIA) of development projects in conflict zones. Ottawa: International Development Research Centre. [online] available from <<http://www.idrc.ca/peace/>> [24.6.2003]

- Butler, Fiona (1997) 'Regionalism and Integration.' In The Globalization of World Politics. An Introduction to International Relations. ed. by Baylis, John and Smith, Steve. Oxford:Oxford University Press:409-428
- Buvac, Drago (1996) 'A Pyrrhic Inheritance'. Warreport No 46, October, 28-29
- Buwitt, Detlef (2002) 'Internationale Polizei in VN-Missionen auf dem Balkan – Erfahrungen aus den Einsatzen in Bosnien und Herzegowina und im Kosovo.' In Deutsche Konfliktbewältigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 213-234
- CAA (1997) 'Annual Report 1996.' In (ed.) Bulletin Voice. Peace and Human Rights. Bulletin No 13, March. ed. by Centar za antiratnu akciju. Belgrade: 4-13
- Cagorovic, Nebojsa (1997) 'The First President Falls'. Warreport No 56, November
- Cahill, Kevin M. (ed.) (1996) Preventive Diplomacy. Stopping Wars Before They Start. New York:Basic Books
- Calic, Marie-Janine (1996a) 'Einfuehrung: Wege zur Konsolidierung des Friedens im ehemaligen Jugoslawien.' In Friedenskonsolidierung im ehemaligen Jugoslawien: Sicherheitspolitische und zivile Aufgaben. ed. by Calic, Marie-Janine. Ebenhausen:Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik: 19-36
- . (1996b) 'Friedensstrategien in komplexen Konfliktfeldern. Lehren aus dem zerfallenen Jugoslawien.' Friedens-Warte 71 (4) 455-472
- . (1996c) Krieg und Frieden in Bosnien-Herzegowina. Frankfurt a. Main: edition suhrkamp
- . (1998a) 'Kosovo vor der Katastrophe?' Blaetter fuer deutsche und internationale Politik 4, 404-410
- . (1998b) 'Kosovo: Krieg oder Konfliktloesung.' Suedosteuropa Mitteilungen 2, 112-120
- . (ed.) (1996) Friedenskonsolidierung im ehemaligen Jugoslawien: Sicherheitspolitische und zivile Aufgaben. Ebenhausen:Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik
- Call, Charles T. and Cousens, Elisabeth M (2007) Ending Wars and Building Peace. IPA Working Paper Series. International Peace Academy. [online] available from <://www.ipacedemy.org> [20.11.2008]
- Call, Charles T. and Stanley, William (2002) 'Civilian Security.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elisabeth M. Boulder ad London: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 303-325
- Call, Chuck and Barnett, Michael (2000) 'Looking for a Few Good Cops: Peacekeeping, Peacebuilding and CIVPOL.' In Peacebuilding and Police Reform. ed by Holm, Tor Tanke and Eide, Espen Barth. London: Frank Cass: 43-68
- Calließ, Joerg (1996) 'Die Aufgaben ziviler Konfliktbearbeitung und der Aufbau einer angemessenen Infrastruktur.' Die Friedenswarte Band 71, Heft 4, 395-416
- Calließ, Joerg and Merkel, Christine M. (eds.) (1993) Peaceful Settlement of Conflict - A Task for Civil Society. Friedliche Streitbeilegung als Gesellschaftsaufgabe. Dokumentation einer Tagung vom 1. bis 3. Maerz 1993. Loccum Protokolle 7. Loccum: Evangelische Akademie Loccum
- Calließ, Joerg and Merkel, Christine M. (eds.) (1995) Peaceful Settlement of Conflict II – A Task for Civil Society: Third Party Intervention. Dokumentation einer Tagung vom 16.-18. Maerz 1994. Loccum Protokolle 9. Loccum: Evangelische Akademie Loccum
- 'Campagna Kossovo per la riconciliazione e la non violenza.' circolare n.7/'99 (paper)
- Caplan, Richard (1998) 'International diplomacy and the crisis in Kosovo.' International Affairs, October, 745-761

- CARDS Assistance Programme to the Western Balkans: Regional Strategy Paper [online] available from <www.europa.eu.int/comm/external_relations/see/news/ip01_1464.htm> [23.11.2004]
- CARE (2008) Program Summary [online] available from <<http://www.careks.org/content/carekosovowork/programsummary.htm>> [21.7.2008]
- Carey, Henry F. and Richmond, Oliver P. (eds.) (2003) 'Mitigating Conflict. The Role of NGOs.' International Peacekeeping: A Frank Cass Journal Vol 10, No 1, Spring
- Caritas International-Deutscher Caritasverband and Diakonie Katastrophenhilfe – Diakonisches Werk der EKD (2001) Nachdenken ist notwendig – Erklärung zur Mazedonienkrise. June (press release)
- Carlen, Jean-Yves (1994) 'Ex-Yougoslavie: Soutenir les déserteurs.' Non-Violence Actualité No 184, October, 9
- Carlen, Jean-Yves and Duchene, Stève (1999) 'La reconstruction après la guerre. "Bienvenue au Kosovo libre!"' Non-Violence Actualité No 239, November, 16-17
- Carnegie Commission on Preventing Deadly Conflict (1997) Preventing Deadly Conflict.. Final Report. New York, December.
- Carothers, Thomas (1999) Aiding Democracy Abroad. The Learning Curve. Washington: Carnegie Endowment for International Peace
- . (2001) Ousting Foreign Strongmen: Lessons from Serbia. Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Policy Brief #5 [online] available from <<http://www.carnegieendowment.org/files/Publications/pubhome514.asp?from=pubtype>> [2.3.2004]
- Carpenter, Ted Galen (ed.) (2000) NATO's Empty Victory. A Postmortem on the Balkan War. Washington: Cato Institute
- Carter, April, Clark, Howard and Randle, Michael (2006) People Power and Protest Since 1945: A Bibliography of Nonviolent Action. London: Housmans
- Causidis, Tamara (2004) 'Newcomers Take on German Media Giant'. Balkan Crisis Report No 478, 29. January
- Cavagna, Padre Angelo (2007) 'Ricordando il sacrificio di Gabriele Moreno Locatelli sul ponte Vrbanja a Sarajevo. Per la Pace.' Antenna di pace. [online] available from <http://www.antennedipace.org/antennedipace/articoli/art_672.html> [5.5.2008]
- CCTS (1999) After the War: Rebuilding Kosovo/a. A seminar Organised by the Committee for Conflict Transformation Support (CCTS) 25th May 1999 (paper)
- CDAINC (2002) 'The Role and Impact of Training in Peace Processes.' CBDA and Life & Peace Institute, Reflecting on Peace Practice: Issues Papers. [online] available from <www.cdainc.com> [21.6.2003]
- CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects (2004) Reflecting on Peace Practice Project. [online] available from <<http://www.cdainc.com>> [9.9.2008]
- CDA-Collaborative Learning Projects (2006) Has Peacebuilding Made a Difference in Kosovo? A Study of the Effectiveness of Peacebuilding in Preventing Violence: Lessons Learned from the March 2004 Riots in Kosovo. eds by Reflecting on Peace Practice Project / CARE International
- Cejka, Mary Ann and Bamat, Thomas (eds) (2003) Artisans of Peace. Grassroots Peacemaking among Christian Communities. Maryknoll: Orbis Books
- Cengic, Ermin (1999) 'The Historical Divide'. Transitions Vol 6, No 1, January, 69-70
- Centar za antiratnu akciju (1995) 'The Pakrac Project.' Bulletin Voice. Peace and Human Rights No 8, November, 3

- Centar za antiratnu akciju (ed.) (1997) 'Vesna Pesic receives the Andrey Sakharov Award'. Bulletin Voice. Peace and Human Rights No 15, September, 1
- Centar za mirovne studije (1997) Centre for Peace Studies. Zagreb (Info brochure)
- Center for Antiwar Action Belgrade (1994) Hate Speech. An analysis of the contents of domestic media in the first part of 1993. Belgrade:CAA
- . (1995) 1994 Report on the Work of the Center. Plans for 1995. Belgrade:CAA
- Center for the Study of Balkan Societies and Cultures (CSBSC) in collaboration with Alois Ecker, Andrea Puehringer, and Sebastian Reinfeldt (1998) Documentary Report : Southeast European Educational Initiatives and Co-operations for Peace, Mutual Understanding, Tolerance, and Democracy Graz, November 1998. [online] available from <www-gewi.kfunigraz.ac.at/csbsc/Documentary_report.html> [3.7.2001]
- Center za kulturo miru in nenasilja (Ljubljana), ACLI-CEPAS (Udine) and Alpen-Adria-Alternativ (Villach) (1992) Friedenserziehung im Alpen-Adria-Raum. Dokumentation des internationalen Seminars Tolmin (Slovenija), 17.-21.8.1991. Villach:Alpen-Adria Alternativ
- Central European Initiative (2001) Brief history and basic principles. [online] available from <http://www.ceinet.org/view/01/01_01.htm> [14.8.2003]
- . (2002) CEI Objectives, Strategies and Workplans. [online] available from <http://www.ceinet.org/view/02/02_00.htm> [14.8.2003]
- Centre for Applied NonViolent Action & Strategies (2008a) 10 Years of Nonviolent Conflict in Serbia. [online] available from <http://www.canvasopedia.org/content/serbian_case/nvc-serbia.htm> [16.7.2008]
- . (2008b) Otpor (Resistance) Movement. [online] available from <http://www.canvasopedia.org/content/serbian_case/otpor.htm> [16.7.2008]
- Centre Martin Luther King (1994). Comme King. Organe du Centre Martin Luther King No 41, Janv./févr.
- Centre for Peace, Non-violence and Human Rights Osijek (2001a) Culture of Peace. Osijek
- . (2001b) I Choose Life. Post-war Peace Building in Eastern Croatia. Building a Democratic Society Based on the Culture of Non-violence. Report on the first project phase (1998-2000). ed. by Katarina Kruhonja. Osijek:Centre for Peace, Non-violence and Human Rights Osijek
- Centre for Women's Studies (ed.) (1997) Women and the Politics of Peace. Contributions to a Culture of Women's Resistance. Zagreb:Centre for Women's Studies
- Centro Studi Difesa Civile (1998) Civilian Defence and the White Helmets Project- research concept. By Francesco Tullio et al. Cemiss. Research nr 36/N 1998/1999 (paper)
- Cereghini, M. and Sighele, D. (2002) 'Alguni interventi specifici di confidence building di ONG italiane.' In Le Organizzazioni Non Governative e la trasformazione dei conflitti. Le operazioni di pace nelle crisi internazionali. Analisi, esperienze, prospettive. ed. by Tullio, Francesco. Roma: Edizioni Associate Editrice Internazionale: 126-195
- CFD (1993a) 'Liebe Interessierte', Anschreiben von November 1993 von Anne Schlosser (letter)
- . (1993b) Ausstellung Kinder auf der Flucht. Zusammengestellt fuer den cfd von Michael Strowik. (exhibition)
- Chandler, David (1999) Bosnia:Faking Democracy After Dayton. London / Sterling: Pluto Press
- Chilton, Patricia, Nassauer, Otfried, Plesch, Dan and Patten, Jamie (1994) NATO, Peacekeeping, and the United Nations. British American Security Information Council and Berlin Information Centre for Transatlantic Security, Report 94.1, September

- Chomsky, Noam (1999) The New Military Humanism. Lessons from Kosovo.
Monroe:Common Courage Press
- Chossudovsky, Michel (2000) 'NATO' Reign of Terror in Kosovo.' Variant Vol 2, No 10, Spring 2000, 3-5 [online] available from <<http://www.variant.randomstate.org/Issue10.html>> [2.3.2004]
- . (2001) 'Auf beiden Seiten des Zauns. Der Militaer- und Spionageapparat der USA zieht die Faeden im Mazedonien-Konflikt.' Junge Welt, 7 August 2001, No 182,10-11 (part 1) and 8 August 2001, no 183, 10-11 (part 2)
- . (2006) 'NATO's War of Aggression in Yugoslavia: Who are the War Criminals?' Global Research, March. [online] available from <www.globalresearch.ca/index.php?context=va&aid=2144> [7.6.2008]
- Christakis, Théodore (1996) L'ONU, le chapitre VII et la crise yougoslave.
Paris:Montchrestien
- . (1998) 'Les sanctions contre la République Federale de Yougoslavie (Serbie & Montenegro) : Un bilan.' In Les Nations Unies et L'Ex-Yougoslavie. Colloque des 12 et 13 décembre 1997, Sixièmes rencontres internationales de l'Institut d'Études Politiques d'Aix en Provinces.. Paris :Éditions A. Pedone: 63-86
- Christian Peacemaker Teams (n.d.) Christian Peacemaker Teams Activities 1984-2000.
[online] available from <<http://www.cpt.org/publications/chronology.php>> [19.9.2003]
- Chudoba, Johannes (1997) 'Demokratisierung. Schluessel zum Erfolg der Friedensbemuehungen.' Friedensdienst 6, 33
- 'Citizens' Movements. Alternative Paths to Peace' (1992). Warreport 14, September, 3-9
- Clark, Howard (1992) Fax Message from WRI to Dorie, WRL, Christine Schweitzer, Joergen. 11 August. (fax)
- . (2000) Civil Resistance in Kosovo. London: Pluto-Press
- . (2003a) Transnational Radical Party and War!, 1 April. (Email to wri-internal@wri-irg.org)
- . (2003b) My Visit to Kosovo. 14 April. (E-mail to author)
- . (2004) Fusil brise. 24.October (E-mail to wri-internal@wri-irg.org)
- . (2005) 'The more NGOs- the less civil society?' Peace News No 2457, December 2004-
February 2005, 20-21
- . (2005) More on US-funded 'democratic guerillas. E-mail by Howard Clark to the author,
6. June, documenting a text by Victor S., Otpor, Zubr, Kmara and Pora, Jaft: Eastern Europe's children of the revolution or front groups for the CIA?', from Sunday 19
December 2004. (e-mail)
- . (n.d.) The evolution of the Committee for Conflict Transformation Support, 1992-2006.
Committee for Conflict Transformation Support. [online] available from <<http://www.c-r.org/ccts/>> [27.6.2008]
- Clark, Martin (2001) 'Italian Perceptions.' In Kosovo. Perceptions of War and its Aftermath.
ed by Buckley, Mary and Cummings,Sally N. London:continuum: 122-135
- Clark, Wesley K. (2001) Waging Modern War. Bosnia, Kosovo, and the Future of Combat.
Oxford:PublicAffairs Ltd
- Clarke, Michael (2001) 'British Perceptions.' In Kosovo. Perceptions of War and its Aftermath. ed by Buckley, Mary and Cummings,Sally N. London:continuum: 78-91
- Clausewitz, Carl von (1998) Vom Kriege. Stuttgart:Philipp Reclam (first published 1832)

- Clément, Sophia (1997) Conflict prevention in the Balkans: Case studies of Kosovo and the FYR of Macedonia. Paris: Institute for Security Studies of Western European Union, Chaillot Paper 30
- 'Clinton supports Keeping Sanctions' (1995) Illyria No 364, 15.-18. January, 1
- 'Closing Divides'. (2004) IWPR Balkan Crisis Report No 500, 26. May
- Cohen, Abner (1974) 'The Lesson of Ethnicity.' In Urban Ethnicity. Ed. by Cohen, Abner, London:Tavistock Publications: 9-24
- . (ed.) (1997) Urban Ethnicity. London et al: Tavistock Publications
- Cohen, Lenard J. (1993) Broken Bonds. The Disintegration of Yugoslavia. Boulder:Westview Press
- Cohen, Roger (2000) 'Who Really Brought Down Milosevic?'. New York Times. [online] available from <<http://query.nytimes.com/gst/fullpage.html?res=9A0DE6D81F3BF935A15752C1A9669C8B63&sec=&spon=&pagewanted=4>> [7.5.2008]
- Cohen, Ronald (1978) 'Ethnicity: Problem and Focus in Anthropology.' In Ann. Rev. Anthropol. 7, 379-403
- Coleman, Peter T. (2000) Intractable Conflict. In The Handbook of Conflict Resolution. Theory and Practice. ed. by Deutsch, Morton and Coleman, Peter T. San Francisco:John Wiley and Sons: 428-450
- Coletti, Raffaella, Cugusi, Battistina, Piccarozzi, Marta and CeSPI (2007) From Local to Glocal Networks: Lessons from the Balkans. International conference ,Globalisation, Conflict and the Experience of Localities', Rome, 28-29 June 2007
- Comité pour la paix en Yougoslavie (1992) Comment pouvez-vous contribuer à la résolution non-violente du conflit yougoslave? Quelques pistes et suggestions. Bruxelles, 9 janvier. (leaflet).
- Commission Francaise Justice et Paix (1992) Kosovo. Rapport de Mission. Paris, Decembre (paper)
- . (1992) 'Pourquoi les Albanais ont-ils choisi la non-violence ?' Non-Violence Actualité No 167, March, 11
- Commission of the European Community (2002) Report from the Commission. The Stabilisation and Association Process for South East Europe. First Annual Report. Brussels:EC
- Commission on Human Security (2003) Human Security Now. New York
- Committee for Conflict Transformation Support (2001) 'Innocence and experience. The volunteer project Pakrac, grassroots peacebuilding in Croatia, 1993 – 1997.' CCTS Newsletter 12, Spring 2001 [online] available from <<http://www.c-r.org/ccts/ccts12/pakrac.htm>> [27.6.2008]
- Committee to Protect Journalists (1994) Journalists Survival Guide. The Former Yugoslavia. October
- Commune. Verein fuer politsiche Bildungsarbeit (n.d.) Von Ljubljana nach Podgorica. Delegationsbericht des Europaeischen Buergerforum. Elisenkappel. (c. 1992). (paper)
- Community Pope John 23rd (1993) Invitation from Italy. E-mail from "Francesca" to Christine Schweitzer, 25.September
- Conference of European Churches (1999) Peace and Mediation Work in Kosovo, 16-17 August 1999. Bossey:Ecumenical Institute
- Conflict or Dialogue. Serbian-Albanian relations and integration of the Balkans. Studies and essays* (1994) Subotica: Open University and European Civic Centre for Conflict Resolution

- 'Conflict Resolution Workshop in Yugoslavia'. (1992) Intruder Year II, No 4, February
- Connelly, Maureen (1998) 'UNHCR and Non-Governmental Organizations.' In Government-NGO Relations in Preventing Violence, Transforming Conflict and Building Peace. Report from a Conference in Mariefred, Sweden, September 4-6, 1997. Organised by Peace Team Forum, Sweden and supported by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. Ed by Wirmark, Bo. Stockholm 1998:110-113
- Cooley, Alexander and Ron, James (2002) 'The NGO Scramble. Organizational Insecurity and the Political Economy of Transnational Action.' In International Security Vol 27, No 1, Summer, 5-39, The MIT Press Journals [online] available from <www.mitpress.mit.edu/journals> [26.6.2003]
- Cordone, Claudio (2000) 'Police Reform and Human Rights Investigations: The Experience of the UN Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina.' In Peacebuilding and Police Reform. ed by Holm, Tor Tanke and Eide, Espen Barth. London: Frank Cass: 191-209
- CORE- Centre for OSCE Research and Institute for Peace Research and Security Studies of the University of Hamburg (2002) Kosovo. Mission Information Package.
- Cortright, David (2001) 'Understanding Economic Sanctions: Effectiveness and Policy.' In The Effects of Economic Sanctions: the Case of Serbia. ed. by Franco Angeli Zucconi, Milano:25-41
- COSPE (n.d.) Progetto di sostegno ai profughi albanesi in Prishtina (Kosovo) (c. 1998) (leaflet)
- Cot, Jean (1997) 'Les Aspects operationnels de l'intervention des Nations Unies dans L'Ex-Yougoslavie'. In Les Nations Unies et L'Ex-Yougoslavie. Colloque des 12 et 13 décembre 1997, Sixièmes rencontres internationales de l'Institut d'Études Politiques d'Aix en Provenances. Paris :Éditions A. Pedone: 29-40
- Council of the European Union (2004) EU Military Operation in Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (fYROM/CONCORDIA). [online]. Available from <http://ue.eu.int/cms3_fo/showPage.asp?id=594&lang=en&mode=g> [10.8.2004]
- Council of the European Union (n.d.-a) European Union Police Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina. [online] available from <http://ue.eu.int/cms3_fo/showPage.asp?id=585&lang=en&mode=g> [10.8.2004]
- . (n.d.-b) European Union Police Mission in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (EUPOL PROXIMA) [online] available from <http://ue.eu.int/cms3_fo/showPage.asp?lang=en&id=584&mode=g&name= > [10.8.2004]
- 'Court to decided on motion to dismiss War Powers lawsuit' (1999), CNN, 3 June. [online] available from <http://www.cnn.com/ALLPOLITICS/stories/1999/06/03/war.powers/> [6.6.2008]
- Cousens, Elisabeth M. (2002) 'From Missed Opportunities to Overcompensation: Implementing the Dayton Agreement on Bosnia.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elisabeth M. Boulder ad London: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 531-566
- Cousens, Elisabeth M. and Cater, Charles K. (2001) Toward Peace in Bosnia. Implementing the Dayton Accords. International Peace Academy occasional paper series, Boulder/London:Lynne Rienner Publishers
- Cox, Marcus (1998) Strategical Approaches to International Intervention in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Sarajevo: Centre for Applied Studies in International Negotiations (CASIN) [online] available from <www.isn.ethz.ch/security/forum/Online_Publications/WS5/WS_5A/Cox1.htm> [20.8.2003]

- Coy, Patrick G. (1997) Protecting Human Rights: The Dynamics of International Nonviolent Accompaniment by Peace Brigades International in Sri Lanka. UMI Dissertation Services
- Cozzoli, A. (2002) 'L'operazione Mir Sada.' In Le Organizzazioni Non Governative e la trasformazione dei conflitti. Le operazioni di pace nelle crisi internazionali. Analysis, esperienze, prospettive. ed by Tullio, Francesco. Roma: Edizioni Associate Editrice Internazionale:174-176
- Crnobrnja, Mihailo (2003) 'Comment: Serbs, Montenegrins and Europe'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 468, 14. November
- 'Croatian Authorities are calmly watching as Croatia becomes a European Rubbish-Heap' (1994). In Arkzin Summary International Edition No 13, May, 4
- Croatian Peace News IV/4 (1994) Peace Conference from Below. Email on list APC/YUGO/ANTIWAR, 28.4.94
- Crocker, Chester A. (2001) 'Intervention. Toward Best Practices and a Holistic View.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Chester A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 229-248
- Crocker, Chester A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela (2001) 'Is More better? The Pros and Cons of Multiparty Mediation.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Chester A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 497-513
- . (eds.) (2001) Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press
- Crook, Richard C. (2001) Strengthening Democratic Governance in Conflict Torn Societies: Civic Organisations, Democratic Effectiveness and Political Context. IDS Working Paper 129, Brighton: Institute of Development Studies, revised February 2001. [online] available from <www.ids.ac.uk/ids/bookshop/wp/wp129.pdf> [25.6.2003]
- Cross, Peter and Rasamoelina, Guenola (eds.) (1999) Conflict Prevention Policy of the European Union, Recent Engagements, Future Instruments. SWP – Conflict Prevention Network (SWP–CPN) .Yearbook 1998/99. Aktuelle Materialien zur Internationalen Politik, Vol 60,4
- Culibrk, Milan (2005) 'Serbia Pays High Price for Losing US Aid.' Balkan Crisis Report No 538
- Culibrk, Milan (2005) 'Serbia Pays High Price for Losing US Aid'. Balkan Crisis Report No 538, 21. January
- Culic, Marinko (1996) 'The Crackdown Continues. Any club that would have us isn't worth joining'. Warreport No 42, June, 15
- . (1997) 'The Last Waltz'. Warreport No 50, April, 11
- Curle, Adam (1986) In the Middle: Non-official Mediation in Violent Situations. Leamington Spa: Berg
- Cutts, Mark (1999) The humanitarian operation in Bosnia, 1992-95: dilemmas of negotiating humanitarian access. New Issues in Refugee Research. Working Paper No 8. Geneva: UNHCR [online] available from <www.unhcr.org> [2.6.2008]
- Cvijanovic, Zeljko (2000) 'Milosevic Second Term Bid'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 154 7.July
- . (2001a) 'American Milosevic Ultimatum'. IWPR'S Balkan Crisis Report No 226, 14. March
- . (2001b) 'Belgrade Funding in Jeopardy'. IWPR'S Balkan Crisis Report No 254, 8.June

-
- . (2001c) 'Milosevic Heading for The Hague'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 259, 28. June
- . (2002a) 'Djindjic Allies Call for Poll Boycott'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 373, 11. October
- . (2002b) 'Power Struggle Strangles Serbia'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 390, 12. December
- . (2002c) 'Serbia: Deadly Rivals Call a Truce'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 381, 11. November
- . (2002d) 'Serbia: Extradition Deadline 'extended''. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 328, 4. April
- . (2002e) 'Serbia: Extradition Drama'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 330, 12. April
- . (2002f) 'Serbia: US Cash Delivers Serious Hage Cooperation. In IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 339, 30. May
- . (2003a) 'ICG Row Shakes Serbia-West Relations'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 442, 12. July
- . (2003b) 'New Indictments May Follow Seselj Charges'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 408, 21. February
- . (2003c) 'Serbia: Milutinovic Extradition Ploy'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 397, 13. January
- Czempiel, Ernst-Otto (1994) 'Die Intervention. Politische Notwendigkeit und strategische Moeglichkeiten.' Politische Vierteljahresschrift 35/H3, 402-422
- Daalder, Ivo H. and O'Hanlon, Michael E. (1999) 'Unlearning the Lessons of Kosovo.' Foreign Policy No 116, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Fall, 128-140
- . (2000) Winning Ugly. NATO's War to Save Kosovo. Washington: Brookings Institution Press
- Danchev, Alex and Halverson, Thomas (eds) (1996) International Perspectives on the Yugoslav Conflict. London: MacMillan Press and New York: St. Martin's Press
- Dani, Anis, Forster, Sarah, Muzur, Mirsada, Djipa, Dino, Lytle, Paula and Poggi, Patrizia (1999) A Social Assessment of Bosnia and Herzegovina. ed. by The World Bank. Europe and Central Asia Region. Environmentally and Socially Sustainable Development Unit, ECSSD, April. [online] available from <www.worldbank.ba/ECA/Bosnia&Herzegovina.nsf/ECADocByUnid/8D222CBAEBCA090585256BC200515FBC/\$FILE/socialassess.pdf> [25.6.2003]
- Daniel, Donald C.F. and Hayes, Bradd C. with de Jonge Oudraat, Chantal de (eds) (1999) Coercive Inducement and the Containment of International Crises. Washington: United Institute for Peace
- Dannreuther, Roland (2001) 'War in Kosovo: History, Development and Aftermath.' In Kosovo. Perceptions of War and its Aftermath. ed by Buckley, Mary and Cummings, Sally N. London: Continuum: 12-29
- 'Das Freiwilligenprojekt Pakrac. Vorstellung des ,International Volunteer Project Pakrac' (1996). In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein: Komzi-Verlag: 111-114
- Daskalovic, Zoran (1997) 'Tudjman Triumphs Over Divided Opposition'. Warreport No 51, May, 3-5
- Daudet, Yves (1998) 'Les Nations Unies et L'Ex-Yougoslavie.' In Les Nations Unies et L'Ex-Yougoslavie. Colloque des 12 et 13 décembre 1997, Sixièmes rencontres internationales de l'Institut d'Études Politiques d'Aix en Provinces. Paris :Éditions A. Pedone: 9-25

- Dauphinee, Elizabeth Allen (2003) 'Rambouillet: A Critical (Re)Assessment.' In Understanding the War in Kosovo. ed. by Bieber, Florian and Daskalovski, Zidas. London/Portland: Frank Cass Publishers:101-121
- De Expeditie (1996) Aan: Leden van de Tweede Kamer, Amersfoort, 27. February (letter)
- De Jonge Oudraat, Chantal (1999) 'Bosnia.' In Coercive Inducement and the Containment of International Crises. ed. by Daniel, Donald C.F. and Hayes, Bradd C. with de Jonge Oudraat, Chantal. Washington: United Institute for Peace:41-78
- . (2001) 'UN Sanction Regimes and Violent Conflict.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 323-351
- De Lapresle, Bertrand (1998) 'Principles to be Observed for the Use of Military Forces Aimed at De-escalation and Resolution of Conflict' . In UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations in a Civil War-like Conflict. ed. by Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin. Hants/Brookfield:Ashgate:137-152
- De Rossanet, Bertrand (1996) Peacemaking and Peacekeeping in Yugoslavia.The Hague, London and Boston:Kluwer Law International
- De Villeneuve, Bertrand (1993) 'Une résistance non-violente face à Milosevic.' Non-Violence Actualité no 174, November, 4-5
- De Vrieze, Franklin (2002) 'Kosovo: Civil Society Awaits a Chance for Reconciliation' . In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette. Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 289-308
- Debiel, Tobias (1999) Der Kosovo-Jugoslawien-Krieg und die deutsche Außenpolitik. Nachfragen und Lehren zu einem noch nicht bewältigten Konflikt. 23 June, Bonn. (paper)
- Debiel, Tobias and Fischer, Martina (2000) Krisenprävention und zivile Konfliktbearbeitung durch die EU. Berghof Report No 4, Berlin: Berghof
- Debiel, Tobias and Nuscheler, Franz (1996) 'Vor einer neuen Politik der Einmischung? Imperative und Fallstricke des humanitären Interventionismus' . In Der neue Interventionismus. Humanitäre Einmischung zwischen Anspruch und Wirklichkeit. ed. by Debiel, Tobias and Nuscheler, Franz. Bonn:Dietz/ Stiftung Entwicklung und Frieden:13-50
- Declarations on the Kosovo-War* (1999) Collection (1 file) of c. 750 different German and international peace groups, student groups, parties etc. (leaflets, press releases)
- Dedijer, Vladimir (1988) Jasenovac – das jugoslawische Auschwitz und der Vatikan. Freiburg:Ahriman-Verlag
- Deichmann, Thomas (2000) 'From 'Never again War' to 'Never again Auschwitz': Dilemmas of German Media Policy in the War against Yugoslavia.' In Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. ed. by Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. London: Pluto Press :153-163
- Del Re, Emmanuela C. (2003) 'When Our Men Arrive. UNMIK's Post-Conflict Administration of Kosovo.' In International Intervention in the Balkans since 1995. ed. by Siani-Davies, Peter. London/New York: Routledge:88-104
- Demichelis, Julia (1998) NGOs and Peacebuilding in Bosnia's Ethnically Divided Cities Washington: United States Institute of Peace [online] available from <www.usip.org/pubs/specialreports/early/BosniaNGO.html> [24.6.2003]

- Dempsey, Gary (2000) 'Headaches for Neighboring Countries.' In NATO's Empty Victory. A Postmortem on the Balkan War. ed. by Carpenter, Ted Galen. Washington: Cato Institute: 59-75
- Den Krieg Ueberleben (1995) Den Krieg ueberleben. Prezivjeti zimu, Hilfe fuer Bosnier auf der Flucht. (handout)
- . (1998) Protokoll der Mitgliederversammlung 22.4.1998. Bonn, 28. April. (minutes)
- 'Der CIA ruestet bosnische Muslime auf' (1995) ZAM-Zeitschrift fuer Antimilitarismus 4, 20
- Der Hohe Fluechtlingskommissar der Vereinten Nationen (UNHCR) (1996) Rueckkehr nach Bosnien-Herzegowina. Informationsbericht. Verwaltungsbezirk der Stadtgemeinde Gracanica. Stand: Februar 1996. (paper)
- 'Der Waffenhandel blueht', Deutsche Uebersetzung von 'Auszuegen aus dem Memorandum der jugoslawischen Regierung an den Sicherheitsrat anlaeblich der Verletzungen des Embargos auf Waffenlieferungen' (1992) Borba 8. January
- Dérens, Jean-Arnault (1992) 'Yougoslavia. Chercher l'espoir.' Non-Violence Actualité No 155, February, 6
- . (2000) 'UN-Protektorat oder Mafia-Republik'. Le Monde diplomatique Nr 6269, 13. October, 9
- Dessler, David (1994) 'How to Sort Causes in the Study of Environmental Change and Violent Conflict.' In Environment, Poverty, Conflict. ed. by Graeger, N. and Smith, Dan. Oslo: International Peace Research Institute
- Destexhe, Alain (1996) 'Humanitarian Neutrality - Myth or Reality?' In Preventive Diplomacy. Stopping Wars Before They Start. ed. by Cahill, Kevin M. New York: Basic Books: 201-218
- . (2001) 'New Institutions for New Times.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 649-657
- Detrez, Raymond (2002a) 'Regional Introduction: The tragic Consequences of Nationalism in an Ethnically Heterogeneous Region.' In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette. Boulder: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 184-194
- . (2002b) 'The Collapse of Tito's Yugoslavia.' In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette. Boulder: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 195-208
- Deutsch, Morton and Coleman, Peter T. (eds) (2000) The Handbook of Conflict Resolution. Theory and Practice. San Francisco: John Wiley and Sons
- Deutsche Gesellschaft fuer die Vereinten Nationen (1993) UN Basis-Informationen. UN-Friedenstruppen und Beobachtermissionen frueher und heute, Stand 31. November.
- Deutsche und internationale Leistungen fuer den Wiederaufbau in Bosnien-Herzegowina* (n.d.) (paper, probably by German government)
- Deutscher Entwicklungsdienst (2003) Civilian Conflict Transformation and Peace Building. Bonn: DED
- Deutsches Rotes Kreuz (1998) Kurzinfos aus der Arbeit des Internationalen Roten Kreuzes. Rundschreiben Nr 5/1998-4/43, 30. March (public information letter)
- . (1999) DRK rechnet mit einer langandauernden Hilfsaktion, Bonn, 14. April. (press release)

- . (2000) Kosovo-Hilfen 2000, Das DRK in Mazedonien. [online] available from <http://drk.de/weltweit/europa/kosovo/mazedonien.htm> [23.12.2002]
- DFID (2002) Conducting Conflict Impact Assessments: Guidance Notes. London:DFID
- Diamond, Louise (1999) Multi-Track Diplomacy in the 21st Century. In People Building Peace. ed. by European Centre for Conflict Prevention. Utrecht : 77-86
- Diamond, Louise and McDonald, John (1993) Multi-Track Diplomacy: A Systems Approach to Peace. Revised Edition Washington:Institute for Multi-Track Diplomacy
- 'Die Amerikaner empfinden sich als Nachfolger Roms. Strategische Konfliktmuster auf dem Balkan. ‚Blaetter‘-Gespraech mit Willy Wimmer'. (2001) Blaetter fuer deutsche und internationale Politik, September, 1054-1065
- 'Die EG will keine Aufspaltung des Vielvoelkerstaats' (1991) die tageszeitung 8. February:3
- Die GRUENEN Bundesverband, KOFRA Muenschen, Frauen gehen zu Frauen, Internationale Frauenliga fuer Frieden und Freiheit, Lesbenring Heidelberg, FrauenAnstiftung Hamburg (1992) Offener Brief. Bornheim, 19. November (open letter)
- 'Die Nacht der langen Messer' (1988) die tageszeitung: 16.July:3
- 'Die Pentagonale-langsame Karriere eines Projekts' (1991) die tageszeitung 21. May:3
- 'Die Plaene der NATO (2001) die tageszeitung 13. August:2
- Die Schwelle (1999) Presseerklaerung: 'Kosovo Refugee House by The Threshold Foundation, 15.May, written by Burkhard Lubert (press release)
- 'Die Vereinbarungen' (2001) die tageszeitung 14. August:3
- 'Die Waffenlisten sind schon erstellt' (2001) die tageszeitung 27. August:10
- Dieter, Helga (2004) 'Zehn Jahre 'Ferien vom Krieg' – ein Rueckblick'. In Ferien vom Krieg Sommer 2003 ed. By Komitee fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie, Cologne
- Dilg, Karl Gerhard (2001) 'Wirtschaftliche Belebung und Stabilisierung durch regionale Konzepte?' In Suedosteuropa auf dem Weg zu Demokratie und Stabilitaet? Presentations of a conference held 10 to 12 November 2000 in Evangelischen Akademie Bad Boll, epd-Dokumentation Nr 9/01, 26. February, 33-36
- Dimitrijevic, Bojan and Sunter, Daniel (2003) 'Serbia: Red Berets Disbanded'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 418, 28. March
- Ditachmair, Philipp and Ratschan, Stefan (1999) 'Unterstuetzung vernachlaessigter Zonen'. Friedensdienst 4, 15-17
- Dizdarevic, Zlatko (1992) 'Ethnic War or Classic Aggression?'. ex-Yugofax No 12, 29 June, 2
- . (1995) Der Alltag des Krieges. Ein Tagebuch aus Sarajevo. Frankfurt/Main: Campus Verlag
- Dnrovsek, Janez (1998) Der Jugoslawien-Krieg. Meine Wahrheit. Zuerich:SmartBooks
- Dobbs, Michael (2000) 'U.S. Advice Guided Milosevic Opposition. Political Consultants Helped Yugoslav Opposition Topple Authoritarian Leader.' Washington Post Foreign Service, 11 December. [online] available from <http://www.washingtonpost.com/ac2/wp-dyn/A18395-2000Dec3?language=printer> [7.5.2008]
- Dokumentation zum Balkankrieg. ‚Dies koennte der Funke sein, der Bosnien-Herzegowina in Brand setzt.‘ (1996). Versoehnung 2, 8-10
- Domi, Tanya (2001) 'US Thinking On Bosnia Unnerves Europeans'. In IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 241, 27 April

- Dominik, Katja (2001) Dezentralisierung und Staatszerfall der SFR Jugoslawien. Wirtschaft und Gesellschaft in Suedosteuropa Vol 17. Muenchen:LDV
- Dominikowski, Thomas and Mehl, Regine (eds.) (1994) Dem Humanismus verpflichtet. Zur Aktualitaet pazifistischen Engagements. Muenster:agenda
- Donat, Branimir (1993) 'Kroaten als Robben. Publizitaet wichtiger als Gewissen? Reaktionen aus Kroatien auf die Bosnien-Kampagne der GfbV'. pogrom 175, February/March :39
- Donestev, Javier (2001) 'SFOR supports HR's actions on Hercegovacka Banka', First published in SFOR Informer #111, April 18, 2001 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/indexinf/111/s111p08a/t0104188a.htm> [14.10.2002]
- Donnard, Gisèle (1993) 'Le féminisme face à la guerre en ex-Yougoslavie.' Réseaux de citoyens No 7, October-November, 11-12
- Dougherty, James E. and Pfaltzgraff, Jr, Robert L. (1997) 4th edn. Contending Theories of International Relations. A Comprehensive Survey. New York: Addison-Wesley Educational Publishers
- Douglas, Stacey (2002) 'Toward a Comprehensive Canadian CIMIC Doctrine: Interagency Cooperation and the Influence of Allies in the Balkans', article submitted to The Canadian Military Journal, 12 November (manuscript)
- Downs, George and Stedman, Stephen John (2002) 'Evaluation Issues in Peace Implementation.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elizabeth M. Boulder ad London: Lynne Rienner Publishers:43-69
- Doyle, Michael W. (2002) 'Strategy and Transitional Authority.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elizabeth M. Boulder. London: Lynne Rienner Publishers:71-88
- Doyle, Michael W. and Mueller, Jan (1998) 'Anatomie eines Erfolges. Die UN-Mission in Ostslawonien.' Internationale Politik (6), 34-38
- Doyle, Michael W., Johnstone, Ian and Orr, Robert C. (Eds), Keeping the Peace. Multidimensional UN operations in Cambodia and El Salvador. Cambridge:Cambridge University Press 1997
- Drago, Antonino and Soccio, Matteo (eds) (1995) Per un modello di difesa nonviolento. Che cosa ci insegna il conflitto nella Ex-Jugoslavia? Atti del IV Convegno Nazionale di Ricerca sulla Difesa Popolare Nonviolenta, Vicenza 6-7 novembre 1993. Venezia:Editoria Universitaria
- Dragovic-Soso, Jasna (2003) 'The Impact of International Intervention on Domestic Political Outcomes. Western Coercive Policies and the Milosevic' Regime.' In International Intervention in the Balkans since 1995, ed. by Siani-Davies, Peter. London/New York: Routledge:120-135
- Dragsdahl, Joergen (2001) International Workshop: The Internationals on the Balkans – Lessons for Macedonia –, 1st and 2nd December 2001, Heinrich-Boell-Foundation Berlin, A Conference Report. Organized by BITS, HBSV and Stabiity Pact. Berlin:BITS
- Dvornik, Srdan and Solioz, Christophe (2007) Next Steps in Croatia's Transition Process. Problems and Possibilities. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft
- Du Pont, Yannick (2002) 'Bosnia and Herzegovna: Trying to Keep the Country Together.' In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette. Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 232- 247
- Ducasse-Rogier, Marianne (2003) A la recherche de la Bosnie-Herzégovine. La mise en œuvre de l'accord de paix de Dayton. Paris:Presses Universitaires de France

- Dudouet, Veronique (2005) Peacemaking and Nonviolent Resistance. A Study of the Complementarity between conflict resolution processes and nonviolent intervention, with special reference to the case of Israel/Palestine. Unpublished PhD thesis, Bradford
- . (2007) Surviving the Peace. Challenges of war-to-peace transitions for civil society organisations. Berghof Report No 16, Berlin:Berghof
- Duffield, Mark (1996) Social Reconstruction in Croatia and Bosnia: An Exploratory Report for SIDA. Birmingham: University of Birmingham (Paper.)
- . (1999) 'Lunching with Killers: Aid, Security and the Balkan Crisis.' In Scramble for the Balkans: Nationalism, Globalism and the Political Economy of Reconstruction. ed. by Schierup, Carl-Ulrik. London:Macmillan Press Ltd: 118-146
- . (2001) Global Governance and the New Wars. The Merging of Development and Security. London:Zed Books
- Dufour, Pierre (1994) 'Eviter l'embrasement des Balkans.' Non-Violence Actualité no 178, March, 4-5
- Dufour, Pierre (2007) On a marché sur la paix. Paris: Thélès
- Durward, Rosemary (2001) 'European Approaches to Peacekeeping: The Muddled Legacy of the Yugoslav Wars.' In Aspects of Peacekeeping. ed. by Gordon, D.Stuart and Toase, F.H. London:Frank Cass: 42-59
- Dutch Centre for Conflict Prevention (ed.) (1996) Prevention and Management of Conflicts. An International Directory.Amsterdam:NSDO
- Dziéwulska, Agata (2002) 'Theory Versus Practice: Peace Processes in Bosnia.' Peace, Conflict & Development. An interdisciplinary Journal Vol 2/2 [online] available from <www.peacestudiesjournal.org/uk/archives> [17.11.2003]
- EastWest Institute (2008) About the EastWest Institute. [online] available from <<http://www.ewi.info/>> [9.7.2008]
- Eavis, Paul and Kefford, Stuart (2002) 'Conflict Prevention and the European Union: A Potential Yet to Be Fully Realized.' In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 3-14
- Ebert, Theodor (1981) 4th edn. Gewaltfreier Aufstand. Alternative zum Buergerkrieg. Waldkirchen: Waldkircher Verlagsgesellschaft
- Eberwein, Wolf-Dieter (2001) 'Humanitaere Hilfe, Fluechtlinge und Konfliktbearbeitung.' In Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung. Eine internationale Herausforderung. Schriftenreihe des OESFK-Studien fuer europaeische Friedenspolitik vol 8. ed by Mader, Gerald, Eberwein, Wolf-Dieter and Vogt, Wolfgang R. Muenster:agenda Verlag:89-109
- Eckert, Reinhard and Ellensohn, Klemens (1999) 'Wo sind all die Bruecken hin?' Friedensdienst 4, 13-14
- ECU-FAX (1996). Wiederaufbau fuer Bosnien-Herzegowina, I/96. ed. by Edith Mueller MdEP, Fraktion Die Gruenen im EP, Bruxelles, 24. January
- Edwards, Michael and Hulme, David (1998) 'Too Close for Comfort? The Impact of Official Aid on Nongovernmental Organizations.' Current Issues in Comparative Education 1(1) – lead article, November 15 [online] available from <www.te.columbia.edu/cice/articles/medh111.htm> [25.6.2003]
- 'EG setzt auf einiges Jugoslawien' (1990) die tageszeitung 18. October:3
- Egger, Norbert (1999) 'Zwischen Aufbruchsstimmung und Ausbruchswille'. Friedensdienst 4, 17-19

- Ehrhart, Hans-Georg and Karádi, Matthias Z. (1998) 'Brennt der Balkan? Plädoyer fuer eine komplexe Praeventionspolitik im Kosovo-Konflikt.' Hamburger Informationen zur Friedensforschung und Sicherheitspolitik Vol 23
- Eide, Espen Barth and Holm, Tor Tanke (2000a) 'Introduction.' In Peacebuilding and Police Reform. ed by Holm, Tor Tanke and Eide, Espen Barth. London: Frank Cass: 1-8
- . (2000b) 'Postscript: Towards Executive Authority Policing? The Lessons of Kosovo.' In Peacebuilding and Police Reform. ed by Holm, Tor Tanke and Eide, Espen Barth. London: Frank Cass: 210-219
- Eiff, Hansjoerg (2002) 'Zehn Jahre deutsches Konfliktmanagement im frueheren Jugoslawien – Erfahrungen und Einsichten.' In Deutsche Konfliktbewaeltigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 153-172
- 'Ein erster Schritt zum Frieden in Mazedonien' (2001) die tageszeitung 14. August: 1
- 'Einmuetig fuer Einsatz' (2002) die tageszeitung 24. October:2
- 'Einsatz in Mazedonien unklar' (2001) die tageszeitung 8. August: 7
- Eisermann, Daniel (2000) Der lange Weg nach Dayton. Die westliche Politik und der Krieg im ehemaligen Jugoslawien 1991 bis 1995. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft
- Eckwall-Uebelhart, Barbara and Raevsky, Andrei (1996) Managing Arms in Peace Processes: Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina, Disarmament and Conflict Resolution Project. New York/Geneva: United Nations
- Elias, Robert and Turpin, Jennifer (eds.) (1994) Rethinking Peace. Boulder & London:Lynne Rienner Publishers
- Elischka, Synes (1999) 'Die unendliche Geschichte Teil V'. Friedensdienst 4, 16-17
- Elliott, Sue (1993) 'Local and Western NGOs: Partnerships or Exploitation?'. Balkan War Report No 22, October/November, 11
- Ellis, Jean (2001) Regional Security Training Programme. November 1999 to November 2000. Evaluation Report Ed: REDR, Christies Evaluation Services, March 2001 (Internet document, www.redr.org/training/evaluation [28.4.2003])
- E-mail and fax exchange between Major David Last, Metta Spencer, Howard Clark and Christine Schweitzer on possibilities of civilian-based defense in the Bosnian enclaves, c.15.July 1995
- Emrich, Steffen and Rickerts, Christian (2007) 'Peer Support and Volunteering: Peace Work Experiences of Schueler Helfen Leben.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin:Lit Verlag: 279-295
- En pie de paz*, no 44, Primavera 1997
- EN.CPS and Nonviolent Peaceforce (ed.) (2007) Civil Society Working on Conflict. Practices and Perspectives. Bonn
- Encarnacion, T., McCartney, C. and Rosas, C. (1990) 'The Impact of Concerned Parties on the Resolution of Disputes.' In Issues in Third World Conflict Resolution. ed. by Lindgren, G., Wallenstein, P. and Nordquist, K.A. Uppsala: Department of Peace and Conflict Research : 42-96
- Engberg, Ulla and Stubbs, Paul (1999) 'Social Capital and Integrated Social Development: A Civil Society Grants Programme in Travnik, Bosnia-Herzegovina.' GASPP Occasional Paper No.2 2/99, [online] available from <<http://www.stakes.fi/gaspp/occasional%20papers/GASPP2-1999.pdf>> [6.2003]

- Entwicklungsdienst-Friedensdienst. Gemeinsamkeit und Differenz* (1996) Die Texte einer Tagung in der Evangelischen Akademie Muelheim/Ruhr am 31. August und 1. September 1996, edp-Dokumentation Nr. 51, 2. December
- EPD (2001a) 'Arbeitskreis 'Friedensauftrag der Kirche' der Evangelischen Landeskirche in Wuerttemberg: Der Kosovokrieg und die friedensethischen Grundpositionen der EKD. Plaedoyer fuer eine theologische und friedenspolitische Neubesinnung.' epd-Dokumentation Nr 39/01, 10. September
- . (2001b) 'Debatte im Deutschen Bundestag: Beteiligung der Bundeswehr am Mazedonien-Einsatz der NATO.' epd-Dokumentation Nr 39/01, 10. September
- Erasmus, Vivien (2001) 'Community Mobilization as a Tool for Peacebuilding.' In Peacebuilding. A Field Guide. ed. by Reyhler, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania. London/Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 246-257
- 'Ernte geht weiter' (2001) die tageszeitung 7. September:2
- ESDP and EU mission update (2007) ISIS European Security Review, No 36, December
- 'Eskalation in Suedserbien' (2001) die tageszeitung 30. January:10
- Eterovic, Ivana and Smith, Jacky (2001) 'From Altruism to a New Transnationalism? A Look at Transnational Social Movements.' In Political Altruism? Solidarity Movements in International Perspective. ed. by Guigni, Marco and Passy, Florence. Lanham: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers:197-218
- 'EU backs Montenegro' (1999) BBC News Online, 17.May
- 'EU sieht Durchbruch in Mazedonien' (2001) die tageszeitung 29. October:11
- ,EU uebernimmt Bosnien-Mission. Aus dem Friedenseinsatz Sfor wird Ende 2004 das neue Kommando Eufor' (2004) Frankfurter Rundschau 27. April:1
- 'Eu uebernimmt Fuehrung im Mazedonien-Einsatz' (2003) Sueddeutsche Zeitung 1 April:9
- 'Eu uebernimmt Mission in Skopje' (2003) Frankfurter Rundschau 1 April:6
- 'EU will Einsatz in Mazedonien verlaengern' (2001) die tageszeitung 10. September:1
- 'European Civic Forum' (1994) This Tuesday. [online] available from <<http://thistuesday.org/node/25>> [11.6.2008]
- Europaeisches Parlament (1995) 'Entschlieuung zu den Deserteuren aus den Streitkraefte der Staaten des ehemaligen Jugoslawien, verabschiedet am 28. Oktober 1993.' ZAM 3, 4
- 'Europarat oeffnet Serbien-Montenegro seine Tuer' (2003) Frankfurter Rundschau 27 March::6
- European Bureau for Conscientious Objection (1991) Press Release: Yougoslavia – the right to asylum for conscientious objectors. Brussels, 25.September
- European Centre for Conflict Prevention (1999) People Building Peace. 35 Inspiring Stories from Around the World. Utrecht:European Centre for Conflict Prevention
- European Commission (2008) European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights (EIDHR). Support to Human Rights and Democracy actions - Human Rights Defenders. Annex A: Grant Application Form (Parts A and B). Budget line 19.04.01. Reference: EuropeAid/126412/C/ACT/Multi.
- European Commission and World Bank (c. 2004a) Status of SEE countries' relations with the EU. [online] available from <<http://www.seerecon.org/gen/eu-see.htm>> [2.3..2004]
- . (c. 2004b) What is the role of the World Bank? [online] available from <<http://www.seerecon.org/gen/wbrole.htm>> [2.3.2004]
- . (c. 2004c) What types of support are being provided? [online] available from <<http://www.seerecon.org/gen/typesofsupport.htm>> [2.3.2004]

- . (c. 2004d) How much money is being given? [online] available from <<http://www.seerecon.org/gen/howmuch.htm>> [2.3.2004]
- European Movement in Serbia, Interchurch Peace Council and Helsinki Citizens' Assembly (1993) Summer School Novi Pazar-Sandzak-Serbia, 14 – 28 August 1993
(announcement)
- European Network Civil Peace Services (n.d.) EN.CPS History. [online] available from <http://www.en-cps.org/Home/EN.CPS_History> [17.6.2008]
- European Parliament (1997) Regional cooperation in the former Yugoslavia and contractual relations with certain countries in south-east Europe. Texts Adopted by Parliament.
Final Edition : 15/05/1997. [online] available from
<[http://www.europarl.europa.eu/pv2/pv2?PRG=CALDOC&TPV=DEF&FILE=970515
&SDOCTA=3&TXTLST=1&POS=1&LASTCHAP=8&Type_Doc=FIRST&LANGUE
=EN](http://www.europarl.europa.eu/pv2/pv2?PRG=CALDOC&TPV=DEF&FILE=970515&SDOCTA=3&TXTLST=1&POS=1&LASTCHAP=8&Type_Doc=FIRST&LANGUE=EN)> [29.4.2008]
- European Platform for Conflict Prevention and Kontakt der Kontinenten (2001) Toward Better Peace Building Practice. Working Document, 24.-26.October, Utrecht
- European Stability Initiative (2001) Sovereignty, Europe and the Future of Serbia and Montenegro. A Proposal for International Mediation. Discussion Paper, 12 February.
[online] available from <www.esiweb.org> [8.8.2004]
- . (2007) 'The Need for Economic Development and Democratic Planning.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed by Fischer, Martina. 2nd
edn. Berlin:Lit Verlag: 69-105
- . (n.d.) About us. [online] available from <www.esiweb.org/aboutus/> [22.10.2003]
- European Union (n.d.-a) The EU's relations with South Eastern Europe: The EU's actions in support to the Stabilisation & Association Process. [online] available from <http://europa.eu.int/comm/external_relations/see/actions/sap.htm> [21.6.2003]
- . (n.d.-b) The EU's relations with South Eastern Europe: The EU's relations with the state of Serbia & Montenegro, Consultative Task Force. [online] available from <http://europa.eu.int/comm/external_relations/see/fry/ctf/index.htm> [18.6.2003]
- . (n.d.-c) The EU's relations with South Eastern Europe: The EU's relations with the state of Serbia & Montenegro. [online] available from <http://europa.eu.int/comm/external_relations/see/fry/index.htm> [18.6.2003]
- . (n.d.-d) The EU's relations with South Eastern Europe: The EU's relations with the state of Serbia & Montenegro, EU sanctions. [online] available from <http://europa.eu.int/comm/external_relations/see/fry/sanctions.htm> [18.6.2003]
- . (n.d.-e) The EU's relations with South Eastern Europe: The EU's relations with the state of Serbia & Montenegro, Kosovo- the European contribution. [online] available from <http://europa.eu.int/comm/external_relations/see/fry/kosovo/index.htm> [18.6.2003]
- . (n.d.-f) The EU's relations with South Eastern Europe: The EU's relations with the state of Serbia & Montenegro, Republic of Montenegro. [online] available from <http://europa.eu.int/comm/external_relations/see/fry/montenegro/index.htm>
[18.6.2003]
- . (n.d.-g) The EU's relations with South Eastern Europe: The EU's relations with the state of Serbia & Montenegro. Republic of Serbia. [online] available from <http://europa.eu.int/comm/external_relations/see/fry/serbia/index.htm> [18.6.2003]
- . (n.d.-h) The EU's relations with South Eastern Europe: The EU's relations with the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. [online] available from <http://europa.eu.int/comm/external_relations/see/fyrom/index.htm> [18.6.2003]

- . (n.d.-i) How much money is being given? EU International Assistance to South East Europe. [online] available from <www.seerecon.org/gen/howmuch.htm> [2.3.2004]
- . (n.d.-j) Regional Strategy Paper 2002-2006. CARDS Assistance Program to the Western Balkans. (paper)
- European Union Monitoring Mission (EUMM) (n.d.) [online] available from <http://europa.eu.int/comm/external_relations/cfsp/fin/actions/eumm03.htm> [8.8.2004]
- European Union Police Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina. [online] available from <www.eupm.org/> [19.8.2003]
- European Union Police Mission PROXIMA. Fact Sheet. [online] available from <http://ue.eu.int/cms3_fo/showPage.asp?lang=en&id=584&mode=g&name=> [10.8.2004]
- Evangelische Akademie Iserlohn (1999) ...nach dem Krieg ist vor dem Krieg...Kosovo Forum. In Kooperation mit dem Institut Frieden und Demokratie der Fern-Uni Hagen und der LAG Friedenswissenschaften in Nordrhein-Westfalen, 25.-26. Oktober 1999 (conference announcement)
- Evangelische Akademie Tutzing (1996) Ex(it)-Jugoslawien. Frieden statt Gerechtigkeit – zur Zukunft eines zerfallenen Staates. Tagung vom 22.-24. März 1996 (conference programme)
- Evangelische Arbeitsgemeinschaft zur Betreuung der Kriegsdienstverweigerer (ed.) (1994) Friedlich an Konflikten arbeiten. Verleihung des Friedrich-Siegismund-Schultze-Förderpreises fuer gewaltfreies Handeln an das Antikriegszentrum Belgrad. Dokumentation, Bremen:EAK
- Evangelische Kirche in Berlin-Brandenburg (1991) Reader zum Hearing am 26.2.1994 im Haus der Kirche (Berlin).
- Evans-Kent, Bronwyn and Bleiker, Roland (2003) 'Peace Beyond the State? NGOs in Bosnia and Herzegovina.' In Mitigating Conflict. The Role of NGOs. ed. by Carey, Henry F. and Richmond, Oliver P. International Peacekeeping: A Frank Cass Journal Vol 10, No 1, Spring:103-119
- Evensmo, Ivar (2000) 'Annex 1. A Case Study on the Western Balkans: Evaluating Sida's support to the Olof Palme Centre (1998-99).' In Assessment of Lessons Learned from Sida Support to Conflict Management and Peace Building, Annex 1-5, Case Studies, Department for Cooperation with Non-Governmental Organisations and Humanitarian Assistance, Sida Evaluation 00/37:2. ed. by Evensmo, Ivar, Waage, Hilde Henriksen and Gundel, Joakim. Stockholm:SIDA 2000 [online] available from <www.sida.se/evaluation> [25.6.2003]
- Evers, Tilman (ed.) (2000) Ziviler Friedensdienst. Fachleute fuer den Frieden. Idee – Erfahrungen – Ziele. Opladen: Leske + Budrich
- Everts, Dan (2001) 'Kosovo:Status Report.' In The Operational Role of the OSCE in South-Eastern Europe. Contributing to regional stability in the Balkans. Ed. by Ghebali, Victor-Ives and Warner, Daniel. Aldershot:Ashgate:37-40
- Exchange Meeting Among Conflict Resolution Trainers and Peace Educators in Stadtschlaining, Austria, March 19 to 23* (1995). (manuscript)
- Ex-Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis (1993) Protokoll vom Treffen am 20.10.93, written by Anne Schlosser-Larzhali (minutes)
- . (1994) Protokoll vom Treffen am 27.10.94 in Bonn, written by Christine Schweitzer, 29.10.94 (minutes)
- . (1995a) Protokoll vom 9.9.1995 in Kassel, written by Jutta Irle (minutes)

- . (1995b) Protokoll vom Treffen am 16. Dezember 1995 in Kassel, written by Christine Schweitzer, 9.January.1996 (minutes)
- . (1995c) Protokoll vom Treffen des Koordinierungskreises am Donnerstag, den 2.2.1995 in Bonn (minutes)
- Faber, Mient Jan (1993) 'The Ohrid Conference: an Epilogue.' hCa newsletter No 6, Winter, 14-15
- Fawn, Rick (2001) 'Perceptions in Central and South-Eastern Europe.' In Kosovo. Perceptions of War and its Aftermath. ed by Buckley, Mary and Cummings, Sally N. London:continuum: 136-155
- Fearon, James D. (2006) The Rise of Emergency Relief Aid. Stanford. [online] available from <<http://www.stanford.edu/~jfearon/papers/emgaid2.doc>> [23.6.2008]
- Federation of Balkan N.G.O.s for Peace and Cooperation (1996) Second European Conference on Peace, Democracy and Cooperation in the Balkans, Athens 7-10 November 1996, Invitation letter from Kadea, 30 April 1996 (letter)
- Felder, Tim (1991) Jugoslawien- Das gescheiterte Experiment. Skizze einer Krise. Kommentierte Pressedokumentation. ed. by Universitaet Hamburg-Institut for politische Wissenschaft Arbeitspapiere 53, Hamburg
- Ferdowski, Mir A. and Matthies, Volker (eds.) (2003) Den Frieden gewinnen. Zur Konsolidierung von Friedensprozessen in Nachkriegsgesellschaften. Stiftung Entwicklung und Frieden. Bonn:Dietz
- Fetherston, A.B. (1994) Towards a Theory of United Nations Peacekeeping. New York: St.Martin's Press
- . (2000) From Conflict Resolution to Transformative Peacebuilding: Reflections from Croatia. Working Paper 4, Bradford: Centre for Conflict Resolution
- Fischer, Dietrich (2001) 'Vermittelnde und vertrauensbildende Maßnahmen zwischen den Konfliktparteien.' In Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung. Eine internationale Herausforderung. Schriftenreihe des OESFK-Studien fuer europaeische Friedenspolitik vol 8. ed by Mader, Gerald, Eberwein, Wolf-Dieter and Vogt, Wolfgang R. Muenster:agenda Verlag: 64-76
- Fischer, Joschka (1995) 'Das waere blutiger Zynismus.' DER SPIEGEL 34, 27-29
- Fischer, Martina (2001) Conflict Transformation by Training in Nonviolent Action. Activities of the Centre for Nonviolent Action (Sarajevo) in the Balkan Region. Berlin:Berghof
- . (2006a) Civil Society in Conflict Transformation: Ambivalence, Potentials and Challenges. Berlin:Berghof
- . (2006b) Jugendarbeit und Friedensfoerderung in Ostbosnien. Ein Pilotprojekt von Ipak (Tuzla), Schueler Helfen Leben und dem Berghof Forschungszentrum. Berghof Report No 13. Berlin:Berghof
- . (2007a) 'Preface for the 2nd edition.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin:Lit Verlag:V-IV
- . (2007b) 'Crossing Borders? Activities of the Trade Unions. Interview with Jasmin Redzepovic, International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, Sarajevo.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin:Lit Verlag:141-156
- . (2007c) 'The Need for Multi-Dimensional Youth Work: Education, Interethnic Networking and Income Generation.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-

- Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton*. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin:Lit Verlag:233-255
- . (2007d) 'Confronting the Past and Involving War Veterans for Peace: Activities by the Centre for Nonviolent Action, Sarajevo, Belgrade.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin:Lit Verlag: 387-416
- . (2007e) 'Friedenskonsolidierung im westlichen Balkan? Zur Ambivalenz des Beitrags internationaler Missionen'. Die Friedens-Warte Vol 82/1:41-67
- . (2008) 'Civil Society and peacebuilding: potentials and limits'. In: Strategies for Peace. Contributions of International Organizations, States and Non-State Actors. Eds. by Rittberger, Volker and Fischer, Martina. Opladen & Farmington Hills:Barbara Budrich Publishers: 221-259
- . (ed.) (2007) 2nd edn. Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. Berlin:Lit Verlag
- Fischer, Martina and Scotto, Giovanni (eds.) (2000) Southeast European NGOs for the Stability Pact. Berghof Occasional Paper No 17. Berlin:Berghof
- Fischer, Martina and Tumler, Julie (2000) Friedensfoerderung in Bosnien-Herzegovina: Ansaetze der Jugend-, Bildungs- und Kulturarbeit. Berlin:Berghof
- Fisher, Ronald J. (1983) 'Third Party Consultation as a Method of Intergroup Conflict Resolution.' Journal of Conflict Resolution Vol 27, No 2, June, 301-334
- Fisher, Ronald J. (1990) The Social Psychology of Intergroup and International Conflict Resolution. New York:Springer
- . (1993a) 'The Potential for Peacebuilding. Forging a Bridge from Peacekeeping to Peacemaking.' In Peace and Change, Vol 18/3 July, 247-266
- . (1993b) 'Toward a Social-Psychological Model of Intergroup Conflict.' In Conflict and Social Psychology. Ed. by Larsen, Knud S. London: 109-122
- . (2001) 'Methods of Third-Party Intervention.' In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- Fisher, Ronald J. and Keashly, Loreleigh (1990) 'Third party consultation as a method of intergroup and international conflict resolution.' In The Social Psychology of Intergroup and International Conflict Resolution. ed. by Fisher, R.J. New York:Springer-Verlag: 11-238
- . (1991) 'The Potential Complementarity of Mediation and Consultation Within a Contingency Model of Third Party Intervention'. Journal of Peace Research Vol 28, no 1, 29-42
- Fisher, Ronald.J. and Ury, W. (1981) Getting to Yes: How to Negotiate Without Giving in. London:Arrow Books
- Fisher, Simon and Zimina, Lada (2008) Just Wasting Our Time? An Open Letter to Peacebuilders. [online] available from <www.lettertopeacebuilders.ning.com> [10.4.2008]
- Fitzduff, Mari and Church, Cheyanne (2004) 'Stepping Up to the Table: NGO Strategies for Influencing Policy on Conflict Issues.' In NGOs at the Table. Strategies for Influencing Policies in Areas of Conflict. ed. by Fitzduff, Mari and Church, Cheyanne. Oxford et al: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers: 1-22

- Fitzduff, Mari and Church, Cheyanne (eds.) (2004) NGOs at the Table. Strategies for Influencing Policies in Areas of Conflict. Oxford et al: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers
- Flint, Edward (2001) 'Civil Affairs: Soldiers Building Bridges.' In Aspects of Peacekeeping. ed. by Gordon, D.Stuart and Toase, F.H. London:Frank Cass: 231-252
- Flothow, Johannes (2001) 'Zur aktuellen Lage im Kosovo.' In Suedosteuropa auf dem Weg zu Demokratie und Stabilitaet?, Referate einer Tagung vom 10. bis 12. November 2000 in der Evangelischen Akademie Bad Boll, epd-Dokumentation Nr 9/01, 26 February, 13-15
- 'Flucht aus Suedserbien' (2000) die tageszeitung 27.May:2
- Fluegger, Michael, 'Zivile Implementierung eines Friedensabkommens: Im Buero des Hoehen Repraesentanten in Sarajewo'. In Deutsche Konfliktbewaeltigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 195-211
- Fogarty, Brian E. (2002) War, Peace and the Social Order. Boulder:Westview Press, 2002
- Fogg, Richard Wendell (1985) 'Dealing with Conflict. A Repertoire of Creative, Peaceful Approaches.' Journal of Conflict Resolution Vol 29/2, June, 330-358
- Fond Drustvo Bosne I Hercegovine (ed.) (2001) International Support Policies to SEE Countries – Lessons (not) learned in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Sarajevo, August 2001 [online] available from <<http://www.soros.org.ba/en/dokumenti/ostali/book/>> [8.11.2003]
- Fond Otvoreno Drustvo Bosne I Hercegovine (2001) OSF BH Strategy - 2001 and Beyond. [online] available from <www.soros.org.ba/en/dokumenti/strategija/> [8.11.2003]
- Fond za humanitarno pravo (2008) O nama. [online] available from <<http://www.hlc-rdc.org/stranice/Linkovi-modula/O-nama.sr.html>> [3.7.2008]
- Foreign Affairs Committee of the Italian Senate and NATO Office of Information and Press (1998) Crisis management and NATO reform: the test case of Bosnia for collective security in the next century. 15. June 1998, Rome
- Foreign and Commonwealth Office (2007) Europe. Bosnia and Herzegovina. <:www.fco.gov.uk/en/about-the-fco/country-profiles/europe/bosnia-herzegovina/?profile=politics&pg=7> [25.6.2008]
- Former Yugoslavia- UNPROFOR, Profile [online] available from <www.un.org/Depts/DPKO/Missions/unprof_p.htm> [6.3.2001]
- Forum Ziviler Friedensdienst (2002) Projekte des forumZFD und in Kooperation mit Foerderverein Willy Brandt-Zentrum, Ohne Ruestung Leben, pax christi Bistum Aachen, Pax Christi Bistum Rottenburg-Stuttgart, pax christi Deutsche Sektion, November. Bonn: ForumCPS
- . (2004) 'Fruehsommer in Serbien. Friedensfachkraefte vor Ort.'in: Frieden braucht Fachleute. Zeitung fuer den Zivilen Friedensdienst, Vol 2
- . (n.d.-a) 'Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung'- ein neues Konzept. [online] available from www.friedenbrauchtfachleute.de/content/konzept.php< [4.7.2003]
- . (n.d.-b) UEbersicht nach Regionen. [online] available from <www.friedenbrauchtfachleute.de/content/projekte.php> [4.7.2003]
- Franz, Vera et al (1999) 'Ich habe Fluegel. Sie haben keine.' Friedensdienst 4, 9-11
- Frauen helfen Frauen (n.d.) Teildokumentation ueber Vergewaltigung im jugoslawischen Buergerkrieg (c.1993) (paper)
- Frauen in Schwarz Koeln (1995) Mir zada! Frieden jetzt! Internationaler Frauen-Friedenskongreß im Friedensdorf Tresnjevack/Serbien, 3.-7. August 1995, veranstaltet von den 'Frauen in Schwarz', Belgrad'. (flyer)

- Frauen Netzwerk fuer Frieden (1999) Infobrief Nr 6, August
- Freeman, Mark and Wierda, Marieke (2002) 'The ICTY and the Pursuit of Justice in the Balkans.' In With no Peace to Keep. United Nations Peacekeeping and the Wars in Former Yugoslavia. ed. by Stamkoski, George. 2nd edn. London: Volatile Media: 257-266
- Freise, Josef and Fricke, Eckehard. (eds.) (1997) Die Wahrheit einer Absicht ist die Tat. Friedensfachdienste fuer den Sueden und den Norden. Schriftenreihe Probleme des Friedens.
- Freitag, Christine, Hippler, Jochen and Koch, Jens J. (2002) Evaluierung der Aufbauphase des Zivilen Friedensdienstes (ZFD), Abschluss- und Synthesebericht. Im Auftrag des Bundesministeriums fuer Wirtschaftliche Zusammenarbeit und Entwicklung (BMZ), May (paper)
- 'Freundliche UEbernahme. Mitrovica wurde im Konsens mit Belgrad unter UN-Protektorat gestellt' (2002) Frankfurter Rundschau 27.November
- Fricke, Eckehard (1997) 'Friedensfachdienst im Entwicklungsdienst. Grundsatzliche UEberlegungen und Erfahrungen von 'Eirene'.' In: Die Wahrheit einer Absicht ist die Tat. Friedensfachdienste fuer den Sueden und den Norden. Schriftenreihe Probleme des Friedens. Ed. by Freise, Josef and Fricke, Eckehard Idstein:Komzi Verlag: 95-108
- Fricke, Eckehart (Eirene) -Interview March 2001
- 'Friede nach dem Krieg? Dokumentation einer Veranstaltungsreihe ueber die Zukunft der ehemaligen jugoslawischen Republiken, April bis Juli 1992.' Vol 4 of Dokumentationen Alpe-Adria-Alternativ
- 'Frieden am Montag?' (2001) die tageszeitung 9. August:2
- Frieden braucht Fachleute* (2004). Zeitung fuer den Zivilen Friedensdienst, vol 1
- Friedenkonferenz von unten* (1994) 16.-21. April ,94 in Salzburg und St. Johann/Austria (leaflet)
- Friedensforum (1994) 'Osteraktionen 1994'. Friedensforum 2, 9-10
- Friedensforum Ex-Jugoslawien (1993) 'Verzweifelt wie noch nie' Mahnwache und Kundgebung des Friedensforum Ex-Jugoslawien, 17 Uhr an der Katharinenkirche, Freitag, 10. Dezember 1993. Frankfurt a. Main. (flyer)
- Friedensgutachten 2002* (2002) Ed. by Hessische Stiftung Friedens –und Konfliktforschung, BICC, INEF, FEST und IFSH. Muenster:Lit
- Friedensinitiative Neckarbauer Buerger (1993) Anschreiben an Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis. 22.March (letter)
- Friedensklaerchen. Nachrichten aus der Bonner Friedensbewegung (1992) No 4, September/October, 11th year.
- Friedenskooperative (1999) Brief an den Traegerkreis der Demo 8. Mai usw., 'Friedensbewegung und Krieg, Auswertungstreffen der Berliner Demo am morgigen Freitag, weitere Aussichten. 22 May. (letter)
- Friedenskreis Halle (1999) Von humanitaerer Hilfe zum zivilen Friedensdienst. Erfahrungen aus siebenjaehrigem Engagement fuer Bosnien-Herzegowina. FK-spezial, Halle:FK Halle
- . (n.d.) Projektbeschreibung KRUG MIRA. [online] available from <www.friedensdienst.de/fix/fk/krugmira.html> [30.10.2003]
- Friedensnetz Baden-Wuerttemberg (1999) Aktuelle Infos: Balkan-Krieg. [online] available from <<http://www.friedensnetz.de/Archiv%20Webseiten/Kosovo/Kosovo99.html>> [1.6.20008]

- Friedenspolitische Perspektiven im ehemaligen Jugoslawien (1995) Materials of the conference 17./18. November 1995 in Goettingen, Buntstift e.V., Frauen-Anstiftung e.V., Heinrich-Boell-Stiftung e.V. (leaflets etc)
- Friedensratschlag (1999) Anregungen des Bundesausschusses Friedensratschlags fuer die Friedensbewegung. Kassel, den 5. Juni 1999 (paper)
- Friedrich, Rudi (1995) 'Internationales Deserteursnetzwerk'. In Deserteure der Wehrmacht. ed. by Wette, Wolfram. Essen:Klartext Verlag:333-355
- . (1996) 'Arbeit mit Deserteuren und Kriegsdienstverweigerern'. In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:187-192
- From Stoltenberg-Owen to Dayton. Interview with Thorvald Stoltenberg about Peacekeeping Principles, Politics and Diplomacy' (1998). In UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations in a Civil War-like Conflict. ed. by Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin. Hants/Brookfield:Ashgate::6-14
- Fuderer, Monika and Prising, Daniel (1995) 'Friedensarbeit in Sombor (Vojvodina). Ahimsa.' Alpe Adria Alternativ 3, 24
- Furkes, Josipand Schlarp, Karl-Heinz (eds.) (1991) Jugoslawien: Ein Staat zerfaellt. Reinbek b. Hamburg:Rowohlt Taschenbuch Verlag
- Gacaferi, Virtyt (2001) 'Kosovo Landmine Controversy'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 290, 22.October
- Gaer, Felice D. (1994) 'UN Operations in Former Yugoslavia'. Balkan War Report No 28, September 1994, 14-15
- Gagnon, Chip (1998a) International Non-Governmental Organizations in Bosnia-Herzegovina, Report prepared for the Colombia University Project on Evaluating Western NGO Strategies For Democratization and the Reduction of Ethnic Conflict in the Former Communist States. Ithaca (NY), December 1998 [Online] Available from <<http://www.ceip.org/programs/democr/NGOs/GagnonBIH.pdf>> [24.6.2003]
- . (1998b) International Non-Governmental Organizations and Democracy Assistance in Serbia, Ithaca [online] available from <www.ithaca.edu/politics/gagnon/articles/demob/index.htm> [25.6.2003]
- . (2003) Innovative Strategies of Democracy Assistance: Catholic Relief Services in Serbia. Preliminary Report. Ithaca [online] available from <www.watsoninstitute.org/muabet/new_site/CRS_report.pdf>[24.6.2003]
- Gagnon Jr., V.P. (1994a) Ethnic Conflict as Demobilizer: The Case of Serbia, paper based on presentations made to two workshops in 1994. [online] available from <www.ithaca.edu/politics/gagnon/articles/demob/> [24.6.2003]
- . (1994b) 'Ethnic Nationalism and International Conflict: The Case of Serbia'. International Security 19, No 3, 1994/95, 132
- . (2002) 'International NGOs in Bosnia-Herzegovina: Attempting to Build Civil Society.' In Democracy Assistance and NGO Strategies in Post-Communist Societies, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Democracy and Rule of Law Project. Working Papers No 8, February. ed. by Mendelson, Sarah E. and Glenn, John K. [online] available from <www.ceip.org/files/Publications/demoNGO.asp?from=pubauthor> [25.6.2003], 207-231
- Gallagher, Tom (2003) The Balkans after the Cold War. From Tyranny to Tragedy. Abingdon: Routledge
- . (2005) The Balkans in the New Millenium. In the Shadow of War and Peace. Abingdon: Routledge *

- Galtung, Johan (1976) 'Three approaches to peace: peacekeeping, peacemaking and peacebuilding.' In Peace, War and Defence - Essays in Peace Research vol II. ed. by Galtung, Johan. Copenhagen: Christian Ejlertsen: 282-304
- . (1982) 'Einleitung'. In Anders verteidigen. Beiträage zur Friedens- und Konfliktforschung 2. ed. by Galtung, Johan. Reinbek b. Hamburg: Rowohlt Taschenbuch Verlag : 7-10
- . (1988) Die Prinzipien des gewaltlosen Protests – Thesen ueber die 'Grosse Kette der Gewaltlosigkeit'. Presentation given on 30. May. 1988 in Oekumenischen Begegnungszentrum- Internationales Freundschaftsheim in Bueckeburg for the regional preparatory circle of the conference 'Wege zur Sozialen Verteidigung' (manuscript)
- . (1995) 'The Role of the 'Third Party'.' In Peaceful Settlement of Conflict II – A Task for Civil Society: Third Party Intervention. Dokumentation einer Tagung vom 16.-18. März 1994. ed. by Calließ, Joerg and Merkel, Christine M. Loccum Protokolle 9. Loccum: Evangelische Akademie Loccum: 368-377
- . (1996) Peace by Peaceful Means. Peace and Conflict, Development and Civilization. London: Sage Publications
- . (2002) 'Le 3R dopo la violenza: la ricostruzione, la riconciliazione e la risoluzione delle cause del conflitto.' In Le Organizzazioni Non Governative e la trasformazione dei conflitti. Le operazioni di pace nelle crisi internazionali. Analisi, esperienze, prospettive. ed by Tullio, Francesco. Roma: Edizioni Associate Editrice Internazionale: 55-74
- Gammar, Nicholas (2001) From Peacekeeping to Peacemaking. Canada's Response to the Yugoslav Crisis. Montreal: McGill-Queen's University Press
- Gardner, Ellen (2001) 'The Role of Media in Conflicts.' In Peace-building. A Field Guide. ed. by Reyhner, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania. London/Boulder: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 301-311
- Gass, Thomas and van Dok, Geert (2000) Alliances for Peace. A position paper on crisis prevention, conflict resolution and peace building in international development cooperation. Caritas Switzerland: Lucerne
- Geertz, Clifford (1963) 'The Integrative Revolution. Primordial Sentiments and Civil Politics in the New States.' In Old Societies and New States. ed by Geertz, Clifford. Glencoe: The Free Press: 105-157
- Geismar, Inse (1994) "'Mr. President, Don't divide Bosnia!'" Appell an Praesident Clinton.' pogrom 178, August/September :61
- General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina* (1995) [online] available from <<http://www.nato.int/for/gfa/gfa-home.htm>> [3.3.2003]
- Genscher, Hans-Dietrich (1995) Erinnerungen. Berlin: Wolf Jobst Siedler Verlag
- Georgievski, Boris (2004) 'Macedonia: Farewell to FYROM'. Balkan Crisis Report No 525, 12. November
- Gerald, John Bart (1999) On Crimes of Power: The Bombing of Yugoslavia, 1999. [online] available from <<http://www.serendipity.li/nato/jbg04.htm>> [9.6.2005]
- Gesellschaft fuer bedrohte Voelker (1992) 'Bosnien-Kroatien-Kosovo. Es wurde gesagt: Es ist ein Buergerkrieg. Wir versuchten zu erklaren: es ist ein Eroberungskrieg. Aber es ist Voelkermord. Vierte Welt Aktuell No 102, autumn
- Gesellschaft Kultur des Friedens (1996) Sommeruniversitaet Tuzla. 15. Juli – 15. September 1996. Sent by Henning Zierock on 30.4.1996 to Netzwerk Friedenskooperative (leaflet)
- Ghebali, Victor-Yves (2001) 'The OSCE and the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe.' In The Operational Role of the OSCE in South-Eastern Europe. Contributing to

- regional stability in the Balkans*. Ed. by Ghebali, Victor-Ives and Warner, Daniel. Aldershot: Ashgate: 55-68
- Ghebali, Victor-Ives and Warner, Daniel (eds.) (2001) The Operational Role of the OSCE in South-Eastern Europe. Contributing to regional stability in the Balkans. Aldershot: Ashgate
- Giansily, Jean-Antoine (1999) L'Union européenne et la crise yougoslave. Illusions et réalités. Paris: Editions Denoel
- Giersch, Carsten (1998) Konfliktregulierung in Jugoslawien 1991-1995. Die Rolle von OSZE, EU, UNO und NATO. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft
- Gjurgjeala, Jehona (2003) 'Comment: UN Misses the Point'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 431, 21. May
- Glaser, Barney J. and Strauss, Anselm (1967) The Discovery of Grounded Theory- Strategies for Qualitative Research. New York: de Gruyter
- Glasl, Friedrich (1990) Konfliktmanagement. Ein Handbuch zur Diagnose und Behandlung von Konflikten fuer Organisationen und Berater. Bern/Stuttgart: Paul Haupt Verlag
- Glazer, Nathan and Moynihan, Daniel P. (1963) Beyond the Melting Pot. The Negroes, Puerto Ricans, Jews, Italians, and Irish of New York City. Cambridge/Mass: Harvard Univ. Press
- . (eds.) (1975) Ethnicity – Theory and Experience. Cambridge/Mass: Harvard Univ. Press
- Glenny, Misha (1996) 3rd edn. The Fall of Yugoslavia. The Third Balkan War. London: Penguin Books
- Glorieux, Paul (1998) 'Tensions au Kosovo. Soutenir la résistance civile.' Non-Violence Actualité No 222, March, 10
- Goldstone, Richard J. (2000) For Humanity. Reflections of a War Crimes Investigator. New Haven/London: Yale University Press
- Golla, Kristian (2003) Zur Entstehung der Adressenhefte 'Hilfe fuer Ex-Jugoslawien'. Telephone interview 17th October
- Gollner, Verena (2000) 'Friedensdienst heißt Mitleben'. Friedensdienst 4, 15-16
- Goodhand, Jonathan (2001) Conflict Assessments. A Synthesis Report: Kyrgyzstan, Moldova, Nepal and Sri Lanka. Ed. Conflict, Security and Development Group. Centre for Defence Studies, University of London. [online] available from <<http://www.dfid.gov.uk>> [20.5.2004]
- Goodwin, Deborah (2001) 'UNPROFOR: An Encounter Without an Outcome.' In Negotiation in International Conflict. Understanding Persuasion. ed. by Goodwin, Deborah. London: Frank Cass: 117-136
- . (ed.) (2001) Negotiation in International Conflict. Understanding Persuasion. London: Frank Cass
- Gorbatschow ignoriert 'slowenischen Fruehling' (1988). die tageszeitung 19. March 7
- Gordon, Stuart (2001) 'A Recipe for Making Safe Areas Unsafe.' In Aspects of Peacekeeping. ed. by Gordon, D. Stuart and Toase, F.H. London: Frank Cass: 213-230
- Gordon, D. Stuart and Toase, F.H. (eds.) (2001) Aspects of Peacekeeping. London: Frank Cass
- Gordy, Eric (2003) CRDA and Civil Society in Serbia. n.d. (c..2003) [online] available from <http://www.watsoninstitute.org/muabet/new_site/gordyWatsonreport1.pdf> [25.6.2003]
- Gose, Stefan (1999) Der Preis des Kriegeres. In Der Kosovo-Krieg. Fakten, Hintergruende, Alternativen. ed. by Albrecht, Ulrich and Schaefer, Paul Koeln: Papyrossa Verlag: 158-173

- Goettinger Friedensbuendnis (1994) ‚Bruecken bauen‘. UEber gegnerische Linien hinweg – ein friedensfoerdernder Beitrag fuer das ehemalige Jugoslawien – Slawonien – Suedungarn – Vojvodina. Kurzbericht 3 und Dokumentation eines Vermittlungsworkshops, October. (paper)
- Goulding, Marrack (2002) Peacemonger. London: John Murray, 2002
- Gow, James (1997) Triumph of the Lack of Will. International Diplomacy and the Yugoslav War. London:Hurst
- . (2003) The Serbian Project and Its Adversaries: A Strategy of War Crimes. London: C Hurst & Co Publishers Ltd
- Grabert, Horst (1999) ‚Die vielen Gesichter des Kosovo-Krieges.‘ In Der Kosovo-Krieg. Fakten, Hintergruende, Alternativen. ed. by Albrecht,Ulrich and Schaefer, Paul Koeln:Papyrossa Verlag:18-38
- Grabler, Silvia and Paschinger, David (1997) ‚Die ewige Unsicherheit – und kein Land in Sicht‘. Friedensdienst 6, 30-32
- Grabner, Michael H. (1997) ‚Und immer wieder auf die andere Seite gehen. Michael H. Grabner ueber seinen Friedensdienst in Osijek/Ostslawonien‘. Friedensdienst 6, Jahresbericht 96/97, 8-11
- . (1999) ‚Peace Teams in Ost- und Westslawonien‘. Friedensdienst 1.
- ‚Grazer Memorandum ueber die Prinzipien einer gemeinsamen Kultur- und Friedensarbeit in Sarajevo‘ (1996) Alpe Adria Alternativ,3 :12p
- Greis, Werner (1996) ‚United Games of Nations‘. Alpe Adria Alternativ 1, 13-14
- Greune, Gerd (1996) ‚Die Fluechtlingsarbeit der IFIAS‘. In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:133-138
- Griffith,Hugh and Igric, Gordana (2003) ‚Djukanovic Smuggling Claims Persist.‘ IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 446, 23. July
- Grizold, Anton, Jelusic, Ljubica and Korosec, Tomo (eds.) (1991) Demilitarizacija Slovenije in naciionalna varnost. Zbornik, Ljubljana:Znanstveno in publicisticno sredisce
- Gromes, Thorsten (2007) Demokratisierung nach Buergerkriegen. Das Beispiel Bosnien und Herzegowina. Frankfurt/Main:Campus Verlag, 2007
- Gromes, Thorsten, Moltmann, Bernhard and Schoch, Bruno (2004) Demokratie-Experimente in Nachbuergerkriegsgesellschaften. Bosnien und Herzegowina, Nordirland und Kosovo im Vergleich. HSFK Report 9/2004, Frankfurt/Main:HSFK
- Groups Rally for Kosova in Washington and New York‘. (1995) Illyria No 368, 29. January-1. February, 1
- Gruber, Bettina (1992) ‚Besuch des Fluechtlingslagers Kozina. Alltag im Krieg‘. Alpe Adria Alternativ 4, 8-9
- Grundmann, Martin and Hummel, Hartwig (eds.) Militaer und Politik - Ende der Eindeutigkeiten? Baden-Baden:Nomos 1998
- Grupa MOST (n.d.) Istorije. [online] available from <<http://www.most.org.yu/>> [28.6.2008]
- Gruppe Deserteursberatung und Antikriegssolidaritaet (1991) Wien, Schottengasse, Brief betreffs der Gruendung einer Deserteursberatung in OEsterreich, datiert Wien 16.12.1991 (letter)
- Gruppe fuer eine Schweiz ohne Armee (1992a) Projekt der Arbeitsgruppe International: Jugoslawien‘Kampagne der GSOA, Zuerich, 3.September
- . (1992b) Si vis Pacem...Para Pacem. Vierzehntaeglicher Infodienst zu Ex-Jugoslawien, Nr 1./2. October 1992

- Gugel, Guenther (1999) Wir werden nicht weichen. Erfahrungen mit Gewaltfreiheit. Eine praxisorientierte Einfuehrung. Tuebingen: Verein fuer Friedenspaedagogik
- Guigni, Marco (1999) 'Introduction. How Social Movements Matter: Past Research, Present Problems, Future Developments.' In How Social Movements Matter. ed. by Guigni, Marco, McAdam, Doug and Tilly, Charles. Minneapolis/London: University of Minnesota Press: xiii-xxxiii
- Guigni, Marco and Passy, Florence (eds.) (2001) Political Altruism? Solidarity Movements in International Perspective. Lanham: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers
- Guigni, Marco, McAdam, Doug and Tilly, Charles (eds.) (1999) How Social Movements Matter. Minneapolis/London: University of Minnesota Press
- Guinard, Caroline (2002) From War to Peace. Lessons learned from achievements and failures in peace agreements over the past decade: a strategy for peace process optimization. ed. by Nonviolence International Southeast Asia / International Peace Bureau
- Gulcher, Ernst (1993) Sarajevo 1993. If yo do not come back I will come and get you. 29 July – 15 August 1993' (Paper)
- Gurr, Ted Robert (1996) 'Early Warning Systems. From Surveillance to Assessment to Action.' In Preventive Diplomacy. Stopping Wars Before They Start. ed. by Cahill, Kevin M. New York:Basic Books: 123-143
- Haas, Friedrich Christian (2002) 'Das Konzept der interlocking institutions – Realitaet oder Chimaere im Einsatz? Dargestellt am Beispiel der Zivil-Militaerischen Zusammenarbeit in Bosnien und Herzegowina.' In Deutsche Konfliktbewaeltigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 285-311
- Habertheuer, Heinz (1998) 'Menschenrechte & eine Kultur der Gewaltfreiheit'. Friedensdienst 6, 22-24
- Hackett, Kenneth (1996) The Role of International NGOs in Preventing Conflict. In Preventive Diplomacy. Stopping Wars Before They Start. ed. by Cahill, Kevin M. New York:Basic Books: 269-284
- Hadzic, Miroslav (2003) 'The Controversies of Euro-Atlantic Interventionism in the Balkans.' In International Intervention in the Balkans since 1995, ed. by Siani-Davies, Peter. London/New York: Routledge:59-67
- Hague Appeal for Peace (1999) The Hague Agenda for Peace and Justice in the 21st Century. [online] available from <<http://www.haguepeace.org/index.php?action=resources>> [18.6.2008]
- . (n.d.) 'Conference of '99'. [online] available from <<http://www.haguepeace.org/index.php?action=history&subAction=conf>> [18.6.2008]
- Hague Justice Portal (n.d.) CIJ. Coalition for International Justice. [online] available from <<http://www.haguejusticeportal.net/eCache/DEF/3/663.TD1OTA.html>> [3.7.2008]
- Haller, Gret (2003) 3rd edn. Die Grenzen der Solidaritaet. Europa und die USA im Umgang mit Staat, Nation und Religion. Berlin:Aufbau Verlag
- Haemmerle, Pete (1998) 'Editorial: Fuenf Jahre OEFD'. Friedensdienst 6, :3-5
- . (2001) 'Zehn Jahre danach'. Friedensdienst 4, 5-6
- . Interview March 2001
- Hamilton, Carolyn and Man, Nathalie (1998) Report of the Children and armed Conflict Unit: the Impact of Armed Conflict on Children in Kosovo. Essex University

- Hammond, Philip (2000) 'Third Way War: New Labour, the British Media and Kosovo.' In Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. ed. by Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. London: Pluto Press : 123-131
- Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. (2000) 'Conclusions. First Casualty and Beyond.' In Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. ed. by Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. London: Pluto Press :200-208
- . (eds.) (2000) Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. London: Pluto Press
- Hammond, Philip, Nizamova, Lilia and Savelieva, Irina (2000) 'Consensus and Conflict in the Russian Press.' In Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. ed. by Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. London: Pluto Press :177-184
- Hampson, Fen Osler (2001) 'Parent, Midwife, or Accidental Executioner? The Role of Third Parties in Ending Violent Conflict.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 387-406
- Handbook on United Nations Multidimensional Peacekeeping Operations* (2003) ed. by Peacekeeping Best Practices Unit, Department of Peacekeeping Operations, United Nations
- Handrich, Thomas (1999) Serbien/Vojvodina im Herbst 1999. Ein Reisebericht. (paper)
- Haensel, Heiko and Stobbe, Heinz-Guenter (2002) Die deutsche Debatte um den Kosovo-Krieg: Schwerpunkte und Ergebnisse. Versuch einer Bilanz nach drei Jahren. Berlin:Heinrich-Boell-Stiftung
- Hansen, Greg (2000) 360-Degree Do No Harm Assessment - Phase 1. A Report to the Minorities Alliance Working Group. (Paper)
- Hansen, Wibke, Ramsbotham, Oliver and Woodhouse, Tom (2004) 'Hawks and Doves. Peacekeeping and Conflict Resolution.' In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- Hanset, Willy (2001) 'A Success Story: The United Nations Transitional Authority for Eastern Slavonia.' In The Operational Role of the OSCE in South-Eastern Europe. Contributing to regional stability in the Balkans. Ed. by Ghebali, Victor-Ives and Warner, Daniel. Aldershot:Ashgate:3-10
- Hardy, Kerensa (2001) 'Radio Mir named best among peers', First published in SFOR Informer #116, June 27, 2001 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/indexinf/116/p07a/t0107a.htm> [14.10.2002]
- Hare, A. Paul (1975) 'Third Party Role in Ethnic Conflict.' Social Dynamics 1 (1), 81-107
- Hare, A. Paul and Blumberg, Herbert H. (eds.) (1977) Liberation Without Violence: A Third-Party Approach. Totowa: Rowmand and Littlefield
- Hartmann, Ralph (1999) 'Ein Bombenerfolg – Zehn Jahre deutsche Jugoslawienpolitik'. In Der Kosovo-Krieg. Fakten, Hintergruende, Alternativen. ed. by Albrecht,Ulrich and Schaefer, Paul Koeln:Papyrossa Verlag: 39-55
- Hartsough, David (1996) 'Die Situation im ehemaligen Jugoslawien- Erfahrungen einer mehrwoechigen Rundreise'. In Entwicklungsdienst-Friedensdienst. Gemeinsamkeit und Differenz. Die Texte einer Tagung in der Evangelischen Akademie Muelheim/Ruhr am 31. August und 1. September 1996 edp-Dokumentation Nr. 51/96, 2. Dezember 1996:53-54
- . (1998) 'Report from the Front Lines in Kosovo'. In Peace Team News, ed. by Friends Peace Teams Project, c/ BYM, Sandy Spring, USA, 3/2, Summer, 6-7

- . (2008) Peaceworkers in Kosovo with attachment. E-mail to author, 8 May (e-mail)
- Hartz, Halvor (2000) 'CIVPOL: The UN Instrument for Police Reform.' In Peacebuilding and Police Reform. ed by Holm, Tor Tanke and Eide, Espen Barth. London: Frank Cass: 27-42
- Haufler, Virginia (2001) 'Is there a Role for Business in Conflict Management?' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 659-675
- Hausmaninger, Anna (2001) 'Solidaritaet in Zeiten der Abschottung'. FriedensDienst 4, 13-15
- Hedl, Drago (2000) 'Milosevic's Hotline'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 126, 21.March
- . (2002) 'Zagreb Escapes Sanctions – For Now'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 376, 24.October
- . (2004a) 'Croatia and Slovenia in New Border Dispute'. Balkan Crisis Report No 518, 1. October
- . (2004b) 'Croatia: Sanader trapped by Gotovina Dilemma'. Balkan Crisis Report No 477, 23. January
- Hedl, Drago and Magas, Branka (2002) 'The Unfulfilled Mandate.' In With no Peace to Keep. United Nations Peacekeeping and the Wars in Former Yugoslavia. ed. by Stamkoski, George. 2nd edn. London: Volatile Media: 76-95
- Heffernan, John, (1999) 'Issues Concerning the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.' In Three Dimensions of Peacebuilding in Bosnia. Findings from USIP-Sponsored Research and Field Projects. Peaceworks 32. ed. by Riskin, Steven M. December [online] available from <www.uip.org/pubs/peaceworks/pwks32.pdf> [25.6.2003], 14-17
- Heikle Mission in Mazedonien' (2001) die tageszeitung 2. October:12
- Heiler, Johannes (2002) 'Institutions, Civil Society and Nationalism in the Context of Democratic Consolidation – Prospects for Democracy in Bosnia-Herzegovina.' In Peace, Conflict & Development. An interdisciplinary Journal, Vol 2/2 2002, [online] available from <www.peacestudiesjournal.org/uk/docs/BosniaDemoc.pdf> [17.11.2003]
- Heinrich Boell-Stiftung (1993) Anschreiben von Mediawatch an WDR, 21.7.1993 mit Programmbeschwerde wegen Sendung 'Die geheime Brigade'. (letter)
- . (1999) Uebersicht der Aktivitaeten der Heinch-Boell-Stiftung zum Kosovokrieg. Berlin:HBS
- . (2000) Konferenz 'Wahrheit, Verantwortung und Versoehnung' 16.-19. Maerz 2000 in Ulcinj, Montenegro. (concept paper)
- . (2001a) Mazedonien zwischen staatlicher Souveraenitaet und ethnischer Selbstbestimmung. Dokumentation einer Fachtagung der Heinrich-Boell-Stiftung am 24. September 2001 in Berlin. Reihe 'Dokumentationen der Heirich Boell Stiftung' Nr 19. Berlin:HBS
- . (2001b) Die Arbeit der Heinrich-Boell-Stiftung in Mittel-, Suedost- und Osteuropa. Berlin :HBS
- Heinrich-Boell-Stiftung and Stability Pact for South Eastern Europe (2001) Fachtagung: Kroatien ein Jahr nach dem Umbruch – erte Bilanz, Berlin, 23. bis 25. Februar 2001, Dokumentation. Redaktion: Bodo Weber und Srdan Dvornik, Zagreb:Heinrich Boell Stiftung
- Helden – Muetter – Opfer. Leben im Konflikt: Alltagssituationen von Frauen und Maennern in Palaestina und Bosnien-Herzegowina. Frauenorganisationen berichten.* (2002)

- Evangelische Akademie Bad Boll and Evangelischer Entwicklungsdienst, 15.-17. Maerz 2002, Protokolldienst 26/02 (conference report)
- HELP at a Glance* (2002) [online] available from <www.help-germany.de> [9.4.2002]
- Help! International e.V., Luenen (1995) Humanitaere Hilfe und Fluechtlingsarbeit. Anschreiben an Organisationen mit Arbeit zu Ex-Jugoslawien. Luenen, 9.December (letter)
- Helsinki Citizens' Assembly - Deutsche Sektion (1993a) Anschreiben zwecks Appell von Initiativen aus Sarajevo fuer Protektorat, und Papier von Kulturschaffenden aus Sarajewo mit Vorschlaegen. 5. October. (letter)
- . (1993b) Protektorate fuer Sarajevo und Mostar – das Ueberleben ermöglichen. 4 October
- Helsinki Citizens' Assembly (1992a) Citizens' and Municipal Peace Conference, Ohrid, November 5-8, 1992. (Conference Program of the Helsinki Citizens' Assembly)
- . (1992b) HCA Delegation to Croatia and Slovenia, July 21-31, 1992. (paper)
- . (1995) 'hCa and Tuzla', hCa quarterly, no 14, summer, 28
- Herman, Edward S. and Peterson, David (2000) 'CNN: Selling Nato's War Globally.' In Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. ed. by Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. London: Pluto Press :111-122
- Hermes, Annelore (1995) 'Aufenthaltsstatus fuer bosnische Fluechtlinge. Eine Initiative der Gesellschaft fuer bedrohte Voelker'. pogrom 184, August/September :27
- Hilaj, Arjan (1998) 'Initiative gains more than expected', First published in SFOR Informer #31, March 11, 1998 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/humanitarian/italian-init/italiani.htm> [16.10.2002]
- Hillen, John (2000) 2nd edn. Blue Helmets. The Strategy of UN Military Operations. Washington: Brassey's
- Hipkins, Dominic (2001) 'Croatia: Gotovina Revelations'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 288, 16. October
- Hislope, Robert (2003) 'Between a Bad Peace and a Good War: Insights and Lessons From the Almost-war in Macedonia.' Ethnic and Racial Studies Vol 26, No 1, January, 129-151
- Hobsbawm, Eric J. (1991) Nationen und Nationalismus. Mythos und Realitaet seit 1780. Frankfurt am Main/New York:Campus
- Hochschulrektorenkonferenz (1996) Stand und Perspektiven der Zusammenarbeit mti Hochschulen in Bosnien-Herzegowina, der Bundesrepublik Jugoslawien, Kroatien, Mazedonien und Slowenien. Koordinierungsgespraech in der Hochschulrektorenkonferenz am 18. Maerz 1996. Materialien zur Hochschulkooperation 5, Bonn
- Holbrooke, Richard (1998) To End a War. New York:Random House
- Holliday, Matthew and Sunter, Daniel (2003) 'Serbia: Mladic Arrest Key to NATO Membership'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 393, 3. Janaury
- Holm, Tor Tanke (2000) 'CIVPOL Operations in Eastern Slavonia, 1992-98.' In Peacebuilding and Police Reform. ed by Holm, Tor Tanke and Eide, Espen Barth. London: Frank Cass: 135-156
- Holm, Tor Tanke and Eide, Espen Barth (eds.) (2000) Peacebuilding and Police Reform. London: Frank Cass
- Holzinger, Hans (1992) '"Jetzt koennt ihr zeigen, was ihr koennt'. Erwartungen an und Vorwuerfe gegen die Friedensbewegung im Zusammenhang mit dem Krieg im zerfallenden Jugoslawien'. ZAM-Zeitschrift fuer Antimilitarismus 6, 8-10

- Hombach, Bodo (2001) 'Zukunftsstrategie Stabilitaetspakt'. Internationale Politik 11/2001:36-42
- Hopmann, P. Terrence (1999/2000) 'How to Evaluate OSCE'S Role in Conflict Management'. In Perspektiven und Defizite der OSZE. ed. by Lutz, Dieter S. And Tudyka, Kurt P. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 91-139
- Horowitz, Donald L. (2000) 2nd edn. Ethnic Groups in Conflict. Berkeley, Los Angeles and London: University of California Press
- Horsky, Vladimir (1968) Systemveraenderung und Systemverteidigung. Studien zur Friedensforschung Bd 14, Muenchen/Stuttgart:FEST
- Horvat, Branko (1991) 'Die Irrtuemer der EG-Helfer. Interview mit Branko Horvat.' Alpe Adria Alternativ 6, 11-12
- Hren, Hatidza and Dokter, Reina (eds.) (1999) Srebrenica. Het verhaal van de overlevenden. Amsterdam:Van Gennep
- Huebner, Isabela, WSP International, Interview am 14.11.2003 in Loccum
- Hulme, David and Goodhand,Jonathan (2000) NGOs and Peace Building in Complex Political Emergencies: Final Report to the Department for International Development, Peace Building and Complex Political Emergencies. Working Paper Series, Paper No 12, University of Manchester, March. [online] available from <<http://idpm.man.ac.uk/publications/archive/cpe/index.shtml>> [28.12.2003]
- Human Affairs Review (2000) Invitation to one-day conference 'What can Business bring to Balkan Reconstruction'. 3.October in Brussels (letter)
- Human Rights Watch (n.d.) About HRW. [online] available from <<http://www.hrw.org/about/whoweare.html>> [3.7.2008]
- . (2000) Civilian Deaths in the NATO Air Campaign. [online] available from <www.hrw.org/reports/2000/nato/> [4.3.2004]
- . (2003) World Report 2003. Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [online] available from <<http://www.hrw.org/wr2k3/europe17.html#Sdevelopments>> [22.2.2005]
- Human Security Centre (2005) Human Security Report 2005. ed. Andrew Mack and Zoe Nielsen. Liu Institute for Global Issues at the University of British Colombia. [online] available from <www.humansecuritycentre.org> [20.10.2005]
- Hume, Nick (2000) 'Nazifying the Serbs, from Bosnia to Kosovo'. In Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. ed. by Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. London: Pluto Press :70-78
- Hummer, Hans-Joerg (2000) 'Friedensdienste bei WUS Podgorica.' Friedensdienst 4, 7- 8
- Hunter, Daniel and Lakey, George (2003) Opening Space for Democracy. Third-party nonviolent intervention. Training Curriculum. Philadelphia:Training for Change
- Hurtic, Zlatko, Sapcanin, Amela and Woodward, Susan L. (1999) Pleges of Aid to Bosnia and Herzegovina. In Three Dimensions of Peacebuilding in Bosnia. Findings from USIP-Sponsored Research and Field Projects. Peaceworks 32. ed. by Riskin, Steven M. December [online] available from <www.uip.org/pubs/peaceworks/pwks32.pdf> [25.6.2003], 10-13
- Husum, Soeren Bo (1998) 'UN Military Obervers' Role in De-escalation of Local Conflict. Lessons Learned from a Soldier's Perspective'. In UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations in a Civil War-like Conflict. ed. by Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin. Hants/Brookfield:Ashgate: 318-329

- Huyse, Luc (2001) 'Amnesty, Truth or Prosecution?' In Peace-building. A Field Guide. ed. by Reyhler, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania. London/Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers:322-329
- Icevska, Gordana (1996) 'Wrangling But No Referendum in Macedonia'. Warreport No 43, July,16
- . (1997) 'The 'One-Day War'. Warreport No 53, August,:10
- ICVA (2000) The ICVA Directory of humanitarian and development agencies in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Geneva
- IFIAS (2008) Methods and History. [online] available from <<http://www.ifias.net/page/methods.htm>> [18.7.2008]
- IFOR (1991) Letter to Howard Clark re Meeting with Croatian/Serbian war resisters. October 14. (letter)
- 'Im suedlichen Balkan stehen die Zeichen auf Krieg' (2000) die tageszeitung 2.March:10
- 'In Makedonien traegt der Westen eine erhebliche Mitverantwortung. Der vermeidbare Buergerkrieg' (2001) die tageszeitung 26.March:11
- INAXIS (n.d.) Yugoslavia. History. [online] available from <<http://www.inaxis.org.uk/history/yugoslavia.html>> [2.12.2004]
- Informations- und Koordinationsstelle 'Hilfe fuer Fluechtlingsfrauen und -familien aus dem ehemaligen Jugoslawien (1995) II. Muenchner Fachtagung: Wer hilft was wo wie FLuechtlingen im und aus dem ehemaligen Jugoslawien? 18. Maerz 1995. (conference announcement)
- Informationsstelle der Deutschen Caritas und Diakonie in Pristina (2000) Monatsbericht Oktober. [online] available from <www.cvizk.de/berichte/berichtokt2000.pdf> [15.11.2000]
- Initiative fuer Frieden e.V. (1994) Anschreiben an AbonnentInnen von arkzin in Deutschland. Spring. (letter)
- Initiative zur Unterstuetzung der Friedensbewegungen im ehemaligen Jugoslawien (1992) Vorschlag zur Einrichtung eines KSZE-Medienrates und einer europaeischen Stiftung ,Demokratisierung der Medien'. Berlin, May. (paper)
- Institut d'Etudes Politiques (1998) Les Nations Unies et L'Ex-Yougoslavie. Colloque des 12 et 13 decembre 1997, Sixièmes rencontres internationales de l'Institut d'Études Politiques d'Aix en Provinces. Paris :Éditions A. Pedone
- Institut fuer Friedensforschung und Sicherheitspolitik an der Universitaet (ed.) (2002) OSZE-Jahrbuch 2002. Hamburg/Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft
- Interkulturellen Solidaritaetszentrum e.V. and Anti-Rassismus-Telefon Essen (eds.) (2000) Auschwitz als Rechtfertigung for Krieg. Wohin marschirt die Bundesrepublik? Kritische Beitraege zur Legitimation der deutschen Beteiligung am Jugoslawien-Krieg. Essen
- International Action Center (n.d.) The Rape Charge. [online] available from <<http://www.iacenter.org/bosnia/rape.htm>> [10.6.2008]
- International Center for Transitional Justice (2008a) What is Transitional Justice?. [online] available from <<http://www.ictj.org/en/tj/>> [3.7.2008]
- . (2008b) Mission and History. [online] available from <<http://www.ictj.org/en/about/mission/>> [3.7.2008]
- . (2008c) The Former Yugoslavia. [online] available from <<http://www.ictj.org/en/where/region4/510.html/>> [3.7.2008]
- International Commission on the Balkans (1996) Unfinished Peace: Report of the International Commission on the Balkans. Washington:Carnegie Endowment for International Peace

- International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (2000) Prosecutor's Report on the NATO Bombing Campaign. Press release by the Office of the Prosecutor, The Hague, 13 June. [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/icty/pressreal/p510-e.htm>> [9.6.2008]
- 'International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia' (2008). In Wikipedia – the Free Encyclopedia. [online] available from <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/International_Criminal_Tribunal_for_the_former_Yugoslavia> [2 June 2008]
- International Crisis Group (1997a) Grave Situation in Mostar: Robust Response Required. ICG Bosnia Report No. 19. Sarajevo:ICG
- . (1997b) Dayton: Two Years On. A Review of Progress in Implementing the Dayton Peace Accords in Bosnia. ICG Bosnia Project No 27. Brussels:ICG
- . (1998a) Sandzak: Calm for Now. ICG Balkans Report No 48. Sarajevo:ICG
- . (1998b) Minority Return or Mass Relocation? ICG Bosnia Project Report No 33. Sarajevo:ICG
- . (1998c) Intermediate Sovereignty As A Basis For Resolving The Kosovo Crisis. Brussels:ICG
- . (1998d) Kosovo Briefing. Brussels:ICG
- . (1998e) Kosovo Spring. Brussels:ICG.
- . (1998f) Serbia-The Milosevic Factor. ICG Yugoslavia Project. Brussels:ICG
- . (1999a) Brcko: A Comprehensive Solution. ICG Balkans Report No 55. Sarajevo:ICG
- . (1999b) Milosevic's Aims in War and Diplomacy. ICG Balkans Report No 65. Brussels:ICG
- . (1999c) The New Kosovo Protectorate. ICG Balkans Report No 69. Sarajevo:ICG
- . (1999d) Republika Srpska in the Post-Kosovo Era: Collateral Damage and Transformation. ICG Report No 71. Brussels:ICG
- . (1999e) Waiting for UNMIK: Local Administration in Kosovo. ICG Balkans Report No 79. Pristina:ICG
- . (1999f) Is Dayton Failing? Bosnia Four Years After The Peace Agreement. ICG Balkans Report No 80, Sarajevo :ICG
- . (1999g) Who's Who in Kosovo. [online] available from <www.crisisweb.org/projects/sbalkans/reports/kos27rep.htm> [9.9.99]
- . (2000a) Montenegro's Local Elections: Testing the National Temperature. ICG Background Briefing. Podgorica/Washington/Brussels:ICG
- . (2000b) Sanctions Against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (as of 10 October 2000). Balkans Briefing. Washington/Brussels:ICG
- . (2000c) Montenegro's Socialist People's Party: A Loyal Opposition? ICG Balkans Report No 92. Brussels:ICG
- . (2000d) Bosnian Refugee Logjam Breaks. ICG Report No 95. Sarajevo / Washington / Brussels:ICG
- . (2000e) Kosovo's Linchpin Overcoming Division in Mitrovica. ICG Balkans Report No 96. Pristina / Washington / Brussels:ICG
- . (2000f) Montenegro: In the Shadow of the Volcano. ICG Balkans Report No 89. Brussels:ICG
- . (2000g) Reunifying Mostar: Opportunities for Progress. ICG Balkans Report No 90. Sarajevo / Washington / Brussels:ICG

-
- . (2001a) Peace in Presevo: Quick Fix or Long Term Solution? ICG Balkans Report No 116. Pristina / Belgrade / Brussels:ICG
 - . (2001b) A Fair Exchange: Aid to Yugoslavia for Regional Stability. ICG Balkans Report No 112. Belgrade / Brussels:ICG
 - . (2001c) No early exit: NATO's Continuing Challenge in Bosnia. ICG Balkans Report No 110, Sarajevo / Brussels, 22 May
 - . (2002a) A Half-Hearted Welcome: Refugee Returns to Croatia. ICG Balkans Report No 138. Brussels:ICG
 - . (2002b) Policy Recommendations: Have the Courage to Set Far-Reaching Goals. In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 209-217
 - . (2002c) Moving Macedonia Toward Self-Sufficiency: A New Security Approach For NATO and the EU. ICG Balkans Report No 135. Skopje/ Brussels:ICG
 - . (2003a) Thessaloniki and after (I), The EU'S Balkan Agenda. Balkans Briefing. Brussels:ICG
 - . (2003b) Thessaloniki and after (II), The EU and Bosnia. Balkans Briefing, Sarajevo/Brussels:ICG
 - . (2003c) Thessaloniki and after (III), The EU and Serbia, Montenegro and Kosovo. Balkans Briefing. Sarajevo/Brussels:ICG
 - . (2003d) Southern Serbia's Fragile Peace. ICG Europe Report No 152. Belgrade/Brussels:ICG
 - . (2003e) Buidling Bridges in Mostar. ICG Europe Report No 150. Sarajevo/Brussels:ICG
 - . (2003f) Serbia After Djindjic. ICG Balkans Report No 141. Belgrade/Brussels:ICG
 - . (2003g) Paddy Ashdown and the Paradoxes of State Building. ICG Balkans Report No 146. Sarajevo/Brussels:ICG
 - . (2003h) Macedonia: No Room For Complacency. ICG Europe Report No 149. Brussels:ICG
 - . (2003i) A marriage of Inconvenience: Montenegro 2003. Balkans Report No 142. Brussels:ICG
 - . (2004a) Collapse in Kosovo. ICG Europe Report No 155. Brussels:ICG
 - . (2004b) Serbia's Changing Political Landscape Europe. Briefing. Belgrade/Brussels:ICG
 - . (2004c) Macedonia: Make or Break. ICG Europe Briefing. Belgrade/Brussels:ICG
 - . (2007) Serbia: Maintaining Peace in the Presevo Valley. Europe Report No 186
 - . (2008) Who Funds Crisis Group. [online] available from <http://www.crisisgroup.org/home/index.cfm?id=1151&l=1> [7.7.2008]
 - . (2009) Macedonia's Name: Breaking the Deadlock. Policy Briefing. Europe Briefing 52. Pristina/Brussels:ICG
- International Helsinki Federation for Human Rights (1993) Internationale Koonferenz 'Die Wiederkehr der Albanischen Frage – Ihre Bedeutung fuer den Balkan und Europa. Wien, 7.-10.6.1993. (conference programme)
- International Peace Centre Sarajevo (1997) 'No to intervention in Bosnia-Herzegovina ... International Peace Centre Sarajevo replies.' Peace News, August, 7
- Internationale Fraueninitiative gegen die Gewalt an Frauen (1993) Anschreiben an die Unterzeichnerinnen des Aufrufes zum Internationalen Frauentribunal in Zagreb. Bielefeld/Heidelberg, 17.January (letter)

- Internationale Liga fuer Menschenrechte (1992) Evakuierung von Frauen und Kindern aus Bosnien-Herzegowina. Berlin, September 1992 (paper)
- ‘Internationale Solidaritaet fuer den Frieden in Jugoslawien: Friedensbotschaften. Ein Mittel gegen die Hoffnungslosigkeit’ (1991) Alpe adria 4, 17
- ‘Internationales Europaeisches Tribunal ueber den NATO-Krieg gegen Jugoslawien’ (2000) [online] available from <<http://www.nato-tribunal.de/>> [9.6.2008]
- IPPNW (1993) 2nd IPPNW Balkan Meeting, Visegrad. 21.September. (e-mail)
- Ipsen, Dirk (ed.) (1999) ‘Aspekte und Einschaeztungen zum Krieg im Kosovo.’ IANUS Arbeitsbericht 2/1999
- Isaac, Donna (2000) PRIO/Nansen Case Study. The Balkan Dialogue Project. CBDA/Life & Peace Institute, Reflecting on Peace Practice Project
- Isakovic, Zlatko (2000) ‘Democratisation, Democracy and Ethnic Conflicts in the Balkans.’ Southeast European Politics Vol 1, No1, October, 1-14. [online] available from <www.seep.ceu.hu/volume 11/isakovic.pdf>[25.6.2003]
- Ischinger, Wolfgang (1998) ‘21 Tage Dayton’. In Deutsche Außenpolitik 1995. Auf dem Weg zu einer Friedensregelung fuer Bosnien und Herzegowina: 53 Telegramme aus Dayton. Eine Dokumentation. Ed. by Auswaertigen Amt, Bonn:Auswaertiges Amt: 29-35
- Islami, Nehat (2001a) ‘Kosovo Crime Wave’. IWPR’S Balkan Crisis Report No 210, 18. January
- . (2001b) ‘NATO Confronts Albanian Rebels’. IWPR’s Balkan Crisis Report Extra, March 7
- Israel, Jared and Varkevisser, Nico (n.d.) U.S. Arrogance and Yugoslav Elections. [online] available from <<http://emperors-clothes.com/engl.htm>< [7.5.2008]
- Ivanovic, Zeljko (1999) ‘Speedboats, Cigarettes, Mafia and Montenegrin Democracy’. IWPR’s Balkan Crisis Report No 83, 13. October
- ‘IWF-Auflagen fuer Jugoslawien’ (1988). taz 24.3.88:8
- ‘IWF-Kredit an Berlin’ (1988) die tageszeitung: 4. July:7
- IWPR (2001) ‘US ‘Pays’ for Albanian Police Recruits’. by IWPR staff in London and Skopje. IWPR’s Balkan Crisis Report No 247, 16. May
- . (2002) ‘Special Investigation : Kosovo Agrocitry ‘Cover-Up’’. by IWPR Contributors. IWPR’s Balkan Crisis Report No 393 (part II), 23. December
- . (2003a) ‘Investigative Report Serbia: Detainees Allege Torture’. IWPR’s Balkan Crisis Report No 434, 5.June
- . (2003b) ‘Kosovo: KLA Men Indicted’, by IWPR staff in London. IWPR’s Balkan Crisis Report No 408, 21. February
- . (2003c) ‘Serbia: Army Considered for Liberia Mission’. by IWPR staff in London. IWPR’s Balkan Crisis Report No 453, 15. August
- Jaberg, Sabine and Schlotter, Peter (eds.) (2005) Imperiale Weltordnung – Trend des 21. Jahrhunderts? AFK Friedensschriften 32. Baden-Baden: Nomos
- Jahrbuch Frieden 1994. Konflikte, Abruestung, Friedensarbeit* (1993) Muenchen: Beck’sche Verlagsbuchhandlung
- Jakobi-Schwan, Rainer (1996) ‘Initiativen von Pax Christi im Bistum Aachen’. In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:193-198
- Jalucic, Vlasta (1994) ‘Nachruf auf die Friedensbewegung’. Alpe Adria 2, 12-19
- Jandl, Michael (1999) ‘WUS-Podgorica’. Friedensdienst 4, 20

- Janett, Daniel (1997) ,Vielfalt als Strategievorteil: Zur Handlungskompetenz von Nicht-Regierungs-Organisationen in komplexen sozialen Umwelten.' In Vernetzt und verstrickt. Nicht-Regierungs-Organisationen als gesellschaftliche Produktivkraft. ed. By Altvater, Elmar et al. Muenster: Westfaelisches Dampfboot, pp. 145-173.
- Janigro, Nicole (1992)'Jugoslawismus' – Aufstieg und Niedergang eines Modells. Prokla. Zeitschrift fuer kritische Sozialwissenschaft, 87, No 2, 207-225
- Janjic, Dusan (1997) The Management of Ethnic Conflict and the Crisis of National Identity. In Ethnic Conflict Management. The Case of Yugoslavia . ed. by Janjic, Dusan. Ravenna: Longo Editore:171-193
- . (ed.) (1997) Ethnic Conflict Management. The Case of Yugoslavia. Ravenna:Longo Editore
- Jansa, Janez (1994) Die Entstehung des slowenischen Staates 1988-1992. Der Zerfall Jugoslawiens. Ljubljana: Zalozba Mladinska knjiga
- Jatras, James George (2000) 'NATO's Myths and Bodus Justifications for Intervention.' In NATO's Empty Victory. A Postmortem on the Balkan War. ed. by Carpenter, Ted Galen. Washington:Cato Institute 21-29
- Jean, François and Rufin, Jean-Christophe (eds.) (1999) Oekonomie der Buergerkriege. Hamburg: Hamburger Edition
- Jelacic, Nerma and Vlaho, Maria (2004) 'Bosnia: Fury at Croat Politicians' Arrest'. Balkan Crisis Report No 478, 29. January
- Benichou, Anne (2004) Kooperative Friedensfoerderung? Die OSZE und lokale NGOs in Mostar. Berghof Arbeitspapier 25. Berlin:Berghof
- Jentleson, Bruce W. (ed.) (2000) Opportunities Missed, Opportunities Seized. Preventive Diplomacy in the Post-Cold War World. Lanham: Rowman & Littlefield
- Jerinic, Dragan (2002) 'Bosnia: Serb Minister Resigns Over Customs Scandal'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 343, 14.June
- Joint Federation and ICRC (1999) Situation Report, Crisis in the Balkans – Situation Report No. 8, 12 April (report)
- Johnstone, Diana (2000a) 'Nato and the New World Order: Ideals and Self-Interest'. In Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. ed. by Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. London: Pluto Press : 7-18
- . (2000b) 'The French Media and the Kosovo War.' In Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. ed. by Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. London: Pluto Press : 141-152
- Jones, Bruce D. (2002) 'The Challenges of Strategic Coordination.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elizabeth M. Boulder.London: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 89-115
- Jordan, Gerhard (1992) '11. END-Convention, Bruessel 1992: Die Zukunft der Friedensbewegung'. Alpe Adria Alternativ 3, 21-22
- Jordan, Jessica J. And Srabalo, Marina (2000) Center for Peace, Non-violence and Human Rights: Peacebuilding project. Impact Assessment Findings, Lessons Learned and Recommendations. CBDA/Life & Peace Institute
- Joseph, Tony (1997) 'City to city with the Red Ball Express',First published in SFOR Informer #18, September 3. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/sfor-at-work/red-ball/redball.htm> [14.10.2002]
- Joulwan, George A. and Shoemaker, Christopher C.(1998) Civilian-military Cooperation in the Prevention of Deadly Conflict. A Report to the Carnegie Commission on Preventing Deadly Conflict. New York:Carnegie

- Jovanovic, Branka (n.d.) Bericht der Friedensfachkraft Branka Jovanovic, Bujanovac (c. 2001) (paper)
- Jovanovska, Svetlana and Icevska, Gordana (2002) 'Macedonia: EC Aid Under Fire'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 210 (part II), 21. January
- Jovanovski, Borjan (2001) 'Macedonians Turn Against West'. IWPR'S Balkan Crisis Report No 286, 5. October
- . (2003) 'Macedonia Pleased with US Deal'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 422, 12. July
- Jovanovski, Vladimir (2001) 'Macedonia: War Crimes Inquiries Begin'. Balkan Crisis Report, No 299, 23. November.
- Judah, Tim (2002a) 'Macedonia: 'Greater Albania' Gathers Support'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 341, 7. June
- . (2002b) 2nd edn. Kosovo. War and Revenge. New Haven/London: Yale Nota Bene
- 'Jugendliche zum Graeber pflegen'. (1990) die tageszeitung 20. July: 21
- 'Jugend-Netzwerk Europa' (1998) Alpe Adria Alternativ 1, 10-13
- Jugendwerk der AWO (ed.) (1999) Krieg und Frieden. Bonn: AWO
- 'Jugoslawien will Schulden stunden' (1991) die tageszeitung 28. March: 3
- Jugoslawien-Koordinierungskreis (1992a) Protokoll vom Treffen am 16.9.92, Koeln, Heinrich-Boell-Stiftung. written by Christine Schweitzer. (minutes)
- . (1992b) Protokoll vom Treffen am 25. November 92 in Koeln, Boell-Stiftung. written by Christine Schweitzer (minutes)
- . (1993a) Treffen am 20. Januar 1993-Protokoll. written by Christine Schweitzer. (minutes)
- . (1993b) Protokoll von der Sitzung am 20. April 1993, written by Christine Schweitzer. (minutes)
- . (1993c) Protokoll vom Treffen am 8. September 93, written by Christine Schweitzer. (minutes)
- . (1993d) Protokoll vom Treffen des Koordinierungskreises am 15.12.1993 in Koeln, written by Christine Schweitzer, 20.12.93 (minutes)
- . (1994a) Protokoll vom Treffen am 22. Januar in Bonn, written by Christine Schweitzer, 29. January. (minutes)
- . (1994b) Protokoll vom 'Jugoslawien'-Koordinierungskreis vom 9.3.94 (minutes)
- . (1994c) Protokoll 'Jugoslawienkoordinierungskreis' 30.4.1994 in Kassel, written by Christine Schweitzer (minutes)
- . (1994d) Protokoll vom Treffen am 15.6.94 in Koeln, written by Christine Schweitzer (minutes)
- . (1994e) Protokoll von dem Treffen am 14. Juli in Koeln, written by Christine Schweitzer (minutes)
- . (1995) Protokoll vom Koordinierungskreistreffen am 11. Maerz 95 in Kassel-Wilhelmshoehe (minutes)
- 'Jugoslawiens Armee rueckt vor' (2001) die tageszeitung 17. April: 10
- Jugoslawisches Forum (1992) Erste Versammlung. 3. Kongreß des Europaeischen Buergerforums, Limans (Frankreich), 2.-9. August 1992. (conference invitation)
- Jukic, Zvonimir (2002) 'Bosnia: Mostar Police Reunited'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 39, 20. February

- Jukic, Zvonimir (2001) 'Croat Separatist Bid Foiled'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 251 (part 1), 31.May
- Kaiser, Wolfgang (1994) Local Democracy in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Europe (E-mail archived 8.12.94)
- Kaldor, Mary (1994) 'An Alternative Political Approach in Bosnia-Herzegovina'. hCa Quarterly No 9, Spring, 11-12
- . (1995) 'Towards a Strategy of Peace Enforcement'. Balkan War Report No 30, December 1994/January 1995, 14-16
- . (2001) 2nd edn. New & Old Wars. Organized Violence In a Global Era. Cambridge:Polity Press
- . (2003) 'Intervention in the Balkans. An unfinished Learning Process.' In International Intervention in the Balkans since 1995, ed. by Siani-Davies, Peter. London/New York: Routledge:32-41
- . (2005) Old Wars, Cold Wars, New Wars, and the War on Terror. Lecture given by Professor Mary Kaldor to the Cold War Studies Centre, London School of Economics, 2 February. [online] available from <<http://www.lse.ac.uk/Depts/global/Publications/PublicLectures/>> [6.3.08]
- Kaldor, Mary and Faber, Mient Jan (1993) 'A U.N. Transitional Authority for Bosnia-Herzegovina', hCa newsletter No 7, summer, 3-4
- Kalman, Michael (1993) Der Jugoslawienkonflikt: friedenswissenschaftliche Interventionen, Working Paper 023. Berlin: Institut fuer internationale Politik
- . (1994) 'Der Krieg in Bosnien-Herzegowina. Chronik der Ereignisse.' In Friedens- statt Militaereinsatze. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im Aufwind. ed. by Pax Christi. Probleme des Friedens 2-3/1994. Idstein:Komzi Verlag: 11-18
- . (1999) 'Krieg, Flucht und Vertreibung.' In Der Kosovo-Krieg. Fakten, Hintergruende, Alternativen. ed. by Albrecht, Ulrich and Schaefer, Paul. Koeln:Papyrossa Verlag:125-141
- . (n.d.) Kosovo in Suedosteuropa: Geschichte, aktuelle soziopolitische Lage, Perspektiven der Gewaltpraevention (paper)
- Kaltenboeck, Rudolf (2001) 'Ein OEsterreicher in Slawonien'. Friedensdienst 4, 19-20
- Kapic, Senad (2001) 'Heimkehr als Friedensdiener'. Friedensdienst 4, 9-10
- Kaplan, Robert D. (1993) Balkan Ghosts. A Journey Through History. New York:St. Martin's Press
- Karajkov, Risto (2008) 'Kosovo's Regional Recognition Almost Complete.' Worldpress Org. November 19. [online] available from <<http://www.worldpress.org/Europe/3272.cfm>> [5.1.2009]
- Karlovic, N. L. (1982) 'Internal Colonialism in a Marxist Society: the Case of Croatia.' Ethnic and Racial Studies Vol 5, No 3, July
- Kasseler Friedensratschlag (2000) Anklageschrift der Unabhaengigen Untersuchungskommission zur Erforschung der Kriegsverbrechen der USA und der NATO gegen das Volk von Jugoslawien. [online] available from <<http://www.uni-kassel.de/fb5/frieden/aktuell/anklage.html>> [7.6.2008]. Link to English text of Complaint written by Ramsey Clark: ><http://www.iacenter.org/warcrime/indictmt.htm>> [9.6.2008]
- . (2003) Recht auf Leben nicht einklagbar? Opfer von Varvarin werden nicht entschaedigt - Landgericht Bonn weist Klage serbischer Angehoeriger zurueck. [online] available from <<http://www.uni-kassel.de/fb5/frieden/themen/NATO-Krieg/varvarin4.html>> [6.6.2008]

- . (2008) Beitraege zum NATO-Krieg gegen Jugoslawien. [online] available from <<http://www.uni-kassel.de/fb5/frieden/themen/NATO-Krieg/>> [6.6.2008]
- Kat, Wam (1992) Zagreb-Tagebuch. Schriftenreihe zur Friedenskunde 8. Duesseldorf: Dialog International
- Katana, Gordana (2001) 'Republika Srpska Sanctions Threat'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 245 (part 1), 10. May
- Katana, Gordana (2003) 'Bosnia: Sarovic Sacking Expected'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 419, 2. April
- . (2004) 'Bosnia: Serbs threaten constitutional crisis'. Balkan Crisis Report No 507, 15.7.2004
- Katana, Gordana and Numanovic, Sead (2003) 'Bosnia: US Issues Blacklist'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 434, 4. June
- Kaufman, Joyce P. (2002) NATO and the Former Yugoslavia. Crisis, Conflict, and the Atlantic Alliance. London: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers
- Kaufman, Stuart J. (2001) Modern Hatreds. The Symbolic Politics of Ethnic War Ithaca: Cornell University Press
- KDOM Daily Reports* (1999) Released by the Bureau of European and Canadian Affairs, Office of South Central European Affairs, U.S. Department of State, Washington, DC. Issues 1.1.1999, 3.1.1999. [online] available from <www.state.gov/www/regions/eur/rpt..._kdom.html> [14.5.1999]
- KDOM Updates* (1999) Released by the Bureau of European and Canadian Affairs, Office of South Central European Affairs, U.S. Department of State, Washington, DC: 7.1.1999 – 17.2.1999 (almost daily reports, quoted by date). [online] available from <www.state.gov/www/regions/eur/rpt..._kdom.html> [14.5.1999]
- Kebo, Amra (2001a) 'Bosnia: Calls for End to Days of the Consuls?'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 283 (part 1), 27. November
- . (2001b) 'Bosnian Croats Flex Their Muscles'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 223 (part 1), 2. March
- . (2001c) 'Bosnian Refugees' Troubled Return'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 210, 18. January
- . (2001d) 'HDZ Obstructs Bosnian Assemblies'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 218, 13. February
- 'Kein Geld mehr fuer den Krieg' (2001) die tageszeitung 7. August:4
- 'Keine Chance auf Versoehnung. Kommission faellt der Umgestaltung Jugoslawiens zum Opfer' (2003) Frankfurter Rundschau 3. February:3
- Kellermann, Beate (2006) Das Kosovo zwischen Standard und Status. Vom bewaffneten Konflikt in die unsichere Demokratie. Stuttgart: Ibidem
- Kelman, Herbert (1991) 'Interactive Problem Solving: the Uses and Limits of a Therapeutic Model for the Resolution of International Conflicts.' In The Psychodynamics of International Relationships, Vol 2: Unofficial Diplomacy at Work. Ed. by Volkan, Vamik et al. Lexington: 145-160
- . (1996) 'The Interactive Problem-Solving Approach.' In Managing Global Chaos. Ed. by USIP. Washington: U.S. Institute of Peace: 501-20.
- Kelman, Herbert and Warwick, D. (1978) 'The Ethics of Social Intervention: Goals, Means and Consequences.' In The Ethics of Social Intervention. ed. by Bermant, Gordon, Kelman, Herbert and Warwick, D. New York: John Wiley: 3pp
- Kelmendi, Adriatik (2001) 'Kosovo Prostitution Racket Flourishes'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 230, 28. March

- Kelmendi, Adriatik (2002) 'Kosovo: A Government at Last'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 322, 8. March
- Kelmendi, Adriatik and Gashi, Astrit (2002) 'Kosovo: Arrest Follows Electricity Funds Probe'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 389, 10. December
- Kempf, Wilhelm (1999) Escalation – and deescalation – oriented aspects in the media construction of the Bosnia conflict. Projektgruppe Friedensforschung, Diskussionsbeiträge No 46/1999
- Kenny, Karen (2001) 'Human Rights Monitoring: How to Do It and Lessons Learned.' In Peace-building. A Field Guide. ed. by Reyhler, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania. London/Boulder: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 199-215
- Kent, Gregory (2006) Framing War and Genocide: British Policy and News Media Reaction to the War in Bosnia. Cresskill: Hampton Press
- Keschenat, Heidi (2000) Wahlbeobachtung durch die OSZE als völkerrechtliche Verpflichtung? Eine Darstellung am Beispiel des ehemaligen Jugoslawien. Inaugural-Dissertation zur Erlangung der Doktorwürde. Unpublished Ph.D thesis, Cologne
- KFOR (n.d.-a) Information. [online] available from <http://www.nato.int/kfor/kfor/about.htm> /> [8.8.2004]
- . (n.d.-b) Objectives/Mission. [online] available from <http://www.nato.int/kfor/kfor/objectives.htm> > [8.8.2004]
- Kiermeier, Gerti (1994) 'Die Rolle der Deserteure und Kriegsdienstverweigerer'. In Friedens- statt Militäreinsätze. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im Aufwind. ed. by Pax Christi. Probleme des Friedens 2-3. Idstein: Komzi Verlag: 65-73
- Kijevcanin, Svetlana (2007) 'Reflections on Activism.' In 20 Pieces of Encouragement for Awakening and Change. Peacebuilding in the Region of the Former Yugoslavia. ed. by Rill, Helena, Smidling, Tamara and Bitoljanu, Ana. Belgrade/Sarajevo: Centre for Nonviolent Action: 50-63
- Kille, Kent J. (2004) 'Introduction: A Tool Chest for Peacebuilders.' In International Journal of Peace Studies Vol 9, No 2, Autumn/Winter, 3-9
- King, Iain and Mason, Whit (2006) Peace at Any Price: How the World Failed Kosovo. London: Hurst
- King, Jeromy, Dorn, A. Walter and Hodes, Matthew (2002) An Unprecedented Experiment: Security Sector Reform in Bosnia and Herzegovina. London/Bonn: Saferworld/BICC
- Kirchengemeinden und Diakonie im Rheinland helfen Bosnien-Herzegowina '93* (1993). Duesseldorf (paper)
- Kisters, Heidrun (1999) Friedensinitiative im Hunsrück, Offenes Treffen. Letter from 21 April. (letter)
- Klarin, Mirko (1996) 'Croatia's War of Aggression'; 'Goldstone Goes Loudly'. Warreport No 46, October, 12-13
- Kleck, Monika (2007a) 'Refugee Return – Success Story or Bad Dream? A Review from Eastern Bosnia.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin: Lit Verlag: 107-122
- . (2007b) 'Working with Traumatised Women.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin: Lit Verlag: 343-355
- Klein, Thomas and Gamharter, Benedikt (2000) 'Die Balkan Achterbahn'. Friedensdienst 4, 9-11
- 'Kleine Truppe mit schwachem Mandat' (2001) die tageszeitung 28. September: 7

- Klincov, Dragana (n.d.) Regional Efforts Regarding Refugee Return. [online] available from <http://www.bmlv.gv.at/pdf_pool/publikationen/10_wg13_aacs_150.pdf> [25.6.2008]
- Klotz, Sabine (2002a) Studienfahrt ,Friedensarbeit auf dem Balkan, zivile Konfliktbearbeitung im ehemaligen Jugoslawien, veranstaltet vom Internationalen Bildungs- und Begegnungswerk, IBB und von Winfried Nachtwei, MdB, vom 7.4. bis 14.4.2002. Protokolle ueber den Besuch bei Institutionen der zivilen Konfliktbearbeitung in Bosnien-Herzegowina. (paper)
- . (2002b) Von der Bundesrepublik Jugoslawien zum Staatenbund Serbien und Montenegro'. In Friedensgutachten 2002. ed. Hessische Stiftung Friedens- und Konfliktforschung and Bruno Schoch. Muenster:Lit, 2002:245-253
- . (phone information on CIVPOL-EUPOL in Bosnia), 26 August 2004
- Knaus, Gerald (1997) 'Von den Hochschulen wird es abhaengen'. Friedensdienst 6, 24-26
- Knaus, Verena (2001a) 'Wahlen in Bosnien-Herzegowina.' In Suedosteuropa auf dem Weg zu Demokratie und Stabilitaet?, Conference presentations, 10-12 November 2000 in Evangelischen Akademie Bad Boll, epd-Dokumentation Nr 9/01, 26. February, 10-12
- . (2001b) 'Zur Rolle ethnischer Strukturen und Minderheiten fuer die Demokratie und Stabilisierung in Suedosteuropa.' Conference presentations, 10-12 November 2000 in Evangelischen Akademie Bad Boll, epd-Dokumentation Nr 9/01, 26. February, 5-9
- Knittel, Gudrun and Monsef, Mansour (2001) Vorlaeufiges Kurskonzept 2001b. (paper)
- Knocking on Europe's Door' (2004) Balkan Crisis Report No 493, Part 1, 22. April
- Knoll, Bernhard and Molina, Kara Johnston (2002) 'Ein steiniger Weg: Das Kosovo im Uebergang zur vorlaeufigen Selbstverwaltung.' In OSZE-Jahrbuch 2002. (2002) Ed. by Institut fuer Friedensforschung und Sicherheitspolitik an der Universitaet. Hamburg/Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft:145-167
- Knudsen, Tonny Brems and Laustsen, Carsten Bagge (eds.) (2006) Kosovo between War and Peace. Nationalism, Peacebuilding and International Trusteeship. Abingdon:Routledge
- Kociolek, Oliver (n.d.) Die Wahrnehmung der Krisensituation in Ex-Jugoslawien vor Ausbruch des Krieges in deutschen und franzoesischen Medien am Beispiel von F.A.Z und le Monde. (Manuscript of a diploma thesis at FU Berlin)
- KOFF (2003) Observer and accompaniment missions by Swiss organizations: An element to be strengthened within Swiss peacebuilding activities? Minutes of the KOFF Observer Missions Workshop. September 25. (minutes)
- Kolb, Felix (2005) Protest, Opportunities, and Mechanisms. A Theory of Social Movements and Political Change. Inaugural-Dissertation zur Erlangung des Doktorgrades am Fachbereich Politik-und Sozialwissenschaften der Freien Universitaet Berlin. Unpublished Ph.D thesis, Berlin
- Komitee fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie (1993) Zum Balkankrieg: Helfen! Statt schießen. Sensbachtal. (brochure)
- . (1999) Buerger- und Buergerinnen-Information. Krieg auf dem Balkan. Deutschland ist wieder dabei. Koeln. (brochure)
- . (2001) Ferien vom Krieg. Sommer 2001. Koeln. (brochure)
- . (2002) Ferien vom Krieg. Dokumentation der Ferienfreizeiten fuer Fluechtlingskinder aus dem ehemaligen und heutigen Jugoslawien. Sommer 2002. Koeln. (brochure)
- . (2004) Ferien vom Krieg Sommer 2003. Cologne
- . (2008) Verein. [online] available from <<http://www.grundrechtekomitee.de/index.php?typ=Verein>> [7.7.2008]
- . (n.d.-a) Grundrechte verteidigen. [online] available from <<http://www.grundrechtekomitee.de/index.php?typ=Ziele>> [23.6.2008]

- . (n.d.-b) Helft: Kriegsfluechtlingen. Beerfelden (c. 1992)
- Kommunique der Konferenz Europaeischer Kirchen und des Rats der Europaeischen Katholischen Bischofskonferenz'. In Friedens- statt Militaereinsaetze. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im Aufwind. ed. by Pax Christi. Probleme des Friedens 2-3/1994. Idstein:Komzi Verlag: 120-123
- Konrad Adenauer Stiftung and Friedrich Ebert Stiftung (1997) Konferenz zur Situation in Bosnien, in Bonn-Bad Godesberg am 17.2.97. (conference announcement)
- Konsortium Ziviler Friedensdienst (ed.) (2006) ZFD- Mehr Frieden wagen ... Wege zur Ueberwindung von Gewalt – Sieben Jahre Ziviler Friedensdienst. Bonn:Konsortium Ziviler Friedensdienst
- Koordinierendes Gespraech bezueglich Jugoslawienarbeit. Protokoll vom Treffen am 13. November (1991), written by Christine Schweitzer. (minutes)
- Koordinierungskreis Jugoslawienarbeit (1992a) Protokoll vom Treffen am 14.1.92 in der Boell-Stiftung, written by Christine Schweitzer. (minutes)
- . (1992b) Protokoll vom Treffen am 20. Februar in der H.Boell-Stiftung, written by Christine Schweitzer. (minutes)
- Korski, Daniel (2002) 'EU Bid to Police Bosnia Under Scrutiny'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 310, 18. January (mistakingly titled '2001')
- Kortmann, Karin (2009) Erfahrungen mit zivilen Friedensdiensten und deren Potenzial fuer eine internationale Friedenspolitik. Rede der Parlamentarischen Staatssekretaerin Karin Kortmann am 29.1.2009 im Bernhard-Lichtenberg-Haus in Berlin. [online] available from <http://www.bmz.de/de/presse/reden/kortmann/2009/januar/20090129_rede.html> [3.3.2009]
- Koschnick, Hans and Schneider, Jens (1996) Bruecke ueber die Neretva. Der Wiederaufbau von Mostar. Muenchen:Taschenbuch-Verlag
- Koslowski, Gerd (1995) Die NATO und der Krieg in Bosnien Herzegowina. Deutschland, Frankreich und die USA im internationalen Krisenmanagement. Vierow b. Greiswald:SH Verlag
- Kosova Wins Wide Support at U.N.' (1994) In Illyria No 358, December 19-21, 1, 3
- Kosovo Force (2003a) KFOR Achievements. [online] available from <www.nato.int/kfor/kfor/achievements.htm> [19.8.2003]
- . (2003b) KFOR Objectives/Mission. [online] available from <www.nato.int/kfor/kfor/objectives.htm> [19.8.2003]
- Kosovo Update 22.2.99* (1999a) by the Bureau of European and Canadian Affairs, Office of South Central European Affairs, U.S. Department of State, Washington. [online] available from <www.state.gov/www/regions/eur/rpt_990222_kdom.html> [14.5.1999]
- Kosovo Update 23.2.99* (1999b) by the Bureau of European and Canadian Affairs, Office of South Central European Affairs, U.S. Department of State, Washington. [online] available from <www.state.gov/www/regions/eur/rpt_990223_kdom.html> [14.5.1999]
- Kosovo Update 26.2.99* (1999c) by the Bureau of European and Canadian Affairs, Office of South Central European Affairs, U.S. Department of State, Washington. [online] available from <www.state.gov/www/regions/eur/rpt_990226_kdom.html> [14.5.1999]
- Kosovo Update 27.1.99* (1999d) by the Bureau of European and Canadian Affairs, Office of South Central European Affairs, U.S. Department of State, Washington. [online] available from <www.state.gov/www/regions/eur/rpt_990127_kdom.html> [14.5.1999]
- Kovac, Janez (1999) 'Arrest of Terrorist With Bosnian Passport Causes Concern'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 77, 21. September

- Kovac, Janez (2000a) 'Mujahideen Resist Eviction'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 158, 21.July
- . (2000b) 'Izetbegovic to Call it a Day'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 147, 12. June
- . (2001) 'Bank Closure Provokes Croat Wrath'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 237, 12. April
- . (2002) 'Bosnia: Extraditions May Threaten COE Membership'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 311, 24.January
- Kovac, Janez and Katana, Gordana (2002) 'Bosnia: Nationalists Prevail in Elections'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 373, 11. October
- Kovac-Cerovic, Tuende (1998) 'NGO-Government Relationships in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia: A Failure Story.' In Government-NGO Relations in Preventing Violence, Transforming Conflict and Building Peace. Report from a Conference in Mariefred, Sweden, September 4-6, 1997. Organised by Peace Team Forum, Sweden and supported by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. Ed by Wirmark, Bo. Stockholm 1998:51-56
- Kramer, Helmut and Dzihic, Vedran (2006) 2nd edn. Kosovo –Scheitert die internationale Gemeinschaft? Wien:Lit
- Krauß, Wolfgang (1996) 'Unter dem Regenbogen. Die Arbeit der Mennoniten in Ex-Jugoslawien.' In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:151-156
- Krech, Hans (1997) Der Buergerkrieg in Bosnien-Herzegowina (1992-1997). Ein Handbuch. Berlin Koester
- Kretschmer, Heiko (1996) 'Eine Friedenskonferenz und ein Friedensaktionsplan fuer Bosnien'. In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:249-254
- Kreuzer, Wolfgang (2001) 'Zuhoeren, verstehen und lernen'. Friedensdienst 4, 21-22
- Kriesberg, Louis (2001) 'The Growth of the Conflict Resolution Field.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Chester A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 407-426
- 'Krise in Suedserbiens Pufferzone' (2001) die tageszeitung 20. February:9
- Krisenkonferenz der KSZE zu Konflikten in Jugoslawien? (1991) die tageszeitung 10.May:7
- Kritisches EG-Informationsbuero (1992) Vortrag und Diskussion mit dem Friedensforscher Johan Galtung, 'Europa: Durch Krieg zum Frieden?' 29.September. (paper)
- Kritz, Neil J. (2007) 'The Rule of Law in Conflict Management'. In: Leashing the Dogs of War. Conflict Management in a Divided World. Ed. by Crocker, Chester A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aal, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 401-424
- Kruhonja, Katarina (1998) 'Government-NGO Relation in Preventing Violence, Transforming Conflict and Building Peace – the Experience from Croatia'. In Government-NGO Relations in Preventing Violence, Transforming Conflict and Building Peace. Report from a Conference in Mariefred, Sweden, September 4-6, 1997. Organised by Peace Team Forum, Sweden and supported by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. Ed by Wirmark, Bo. Stockholm:58-64
- Kruhonja, Katarina, Ivanovic, Milan and Stanic, Ivan (2002) 'Croatia: Struggling with Unresolved Postwar Issues.' In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 248-263

- Kuenning, Howard F. (1998) 'Preventive Peacekeeping as a Model for the Prevention of War'. In UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations in a Civil War-like Conflict. ed. by Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin. Hants/Brookfield: Ashgate: :238-252
- Kukla, Claudia (2003) 'Friedlicher Hafen'. Friedensforum 3, 49-50
- Kumer, Anton, Polzer, Miroslav and Skuhra, Anselm (eds.) (2000) Europaeisierung versus Nationalismus. Der ex-jugoslawische Raum auf der Suche nach Stabilität. Frankfurt/Main: Peter Lang
- Kurschat, Reuben (1998) Scham und Schuld in interkollektiven Konflikten. Ueberlegungen zu einer 'multiethnischen Sozialarbeit' im Nachkriegsbosnien. Studienschriften des Friedenskreises Halle e.V. Bd 1, Halle/Saale
- . (2000) 'Wir, Die und Ich. Fremd- und Selbstbilder als Ansatz multikollektiver Sozialarbeit.' In Ziviler Friedensdienst. Fachleute fuer den Frieden. Idee – Erfahrungen – Ziele. ed. by Evers, Tilman Opladen: Leske + Budrich: 57-67
- Kurspahic, Kemal (2003) Prime Time Crime: Balkan Media in War and Peace. USIP
- Kurve Wustrow (1998) Centar za nenasilnu akciju, Jahresbericht September 1997-August 1998. Wustrow.
- . (2001) Argumentationshilfe zur militaerischen Intervention in Mazedonien. Wustrow, 20. August. (brochure)
- . (n.d.-a) Fuer Gewaltfreiheit nach Bosnien-Herzegowina. Nenad Vukosavljevic als KURVE-Trainer in Sarajevo. (c. 1997) (leaflet)
- . (n.d.-b) Friedensfachdienst in Westmazedonien. Ein Projekt der Kurve Wustrow mit LOJA, Mazedonien. (c. 2004) (leaflet)
- Kusdas, Sigmar and Loskot, Uli (1998) 'Mit Kultur ueber die Grenzen gehen'. Friedensdienst 6, 14-17
- Kusovac, Zoran (1998) 'Another Balkans Bloodbath?' Jane's Intelligence Review February, 13-18
- Kuzmanic, Tonci and Truger, Arno (eds.) (1992) Yugoslavia War. Ljubljana/Schlaining: Austrian Study Centre for Peace and Conflict Resolution Schlaining/Peace Institute Ljubljana
- L'Abate, Alberto (1997) Prevenire la guerra nel Kossovo per evitare la destabilizzazione dei Balcani. Attività e proposte della diplomazia non ufficiale. I Quaderni della Difesa Popolare Nonviolenta, No 33, Molfetta: Edizioni La Meridiana
- . (2002a) 'Kossovo: Le attività di confidence building prima e dopo la guerra.' In Le Organizzazioni Non Governative e la trasformazione dei conflitti. Le operazioni di pace nelle crisi internazionali. Analisi, esperienze, prospettive. ed by Tullio, Francesco. Roma: Edizioni Associate Editrice Internazionale: 111-117
- . (2002b) 'La Campagna per una soluzione nonviolenta del problema del Kossovo.' In Le Organizzazioni Non Governative e la trasformazione dei conflitti. Le operazioni di pace nelle crisi internazionali. Analisi, esperienze, prospettive. ed by Tullio, Francesco. Roma: Edizioni Associate Editrice Internazionale: 107-111
- Labournet (n.d.) Kosovo und andere Kriege. Kosovo. Gewerkschaftliche Aufrufe/ Stellungnahmen. DGB / Gewerkschaftsmitglieder. [online] available from <<http://www.labournet.de/krieg/kosovo/aufrufe.html>> [1.6.2008]
- LAG Friedenswissenschaft NRW (1999) ...nach dem Krieg ist vor dem Krieg... Kosovo Forum (25.-26. Oktober 1999 in der Ev. Akademie Iserlohn), Dokumentation der Tagungsbeitraege. Hagen.

- Lakey, George (n.d.) How to Develop Peace Teams –The Lightbulb Theory. published by Training for Change. (paper)
- Lama, Alma (2003) 'Kosovo: Power Transfer Concerns'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 424, 22. April
- Lambach, Daniel (2004) Zivile und militaerische Komponenten im Nachkriegs-Wiederaufbau. Chancen und Risiken einer ungewohnten Nachbarschaft. Dokumentation des Fachgesprachs am 4. Dezember 2003 in der Katholischen Akademie Berlin. ed. by Plattform Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung, FES and INEF. Berlin. [online] available from <://www.konfliktbearbeitung.net/?info=docs&pres=dpage&name=publikationen&PHPS ESSID=d56a11a56ae4c2d179a148e0c25fc70d> [5.5.2008]
- Lamnek, Siegfried (1995) Qualitative Sozialforschung. Band I – Methodologie. Weinheim: Beltz Psychologie Verlags Union
- . (1995) 3rd edn. Qualitative Sozialforschung. Band II - Methoden und Techniken. Weinheim: Beltz Psychologie Verlags Union
- Lampe, John R. (2000) 2nd edn. Yugoslavia as History. Twice There was a Country Cambridge: Cambridge Universitaey Press
- Landgraf, Martin (2000) 'Developing Analytical Tools for Preventive Strategies: A Practitioner's View on Conflict Impact Assessments.' In The Impact of Conflict Prevention Policy. Cases, Measures, Assessments. ed. by Lund, Michael and Rasamoelina, Guenola SWP – Conflict Prevention Network (SWP-CPN) Yearbook 1999/2000, Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 113-121
- Langer, Alexander (1993) 'Information on the Verona Forum.' In Peaceful Settlement of Conflict - A Task for Civil Society. Friedliche Streitbeilegung als Gesellschaftsaufgabe. Dokumentation einer Tagung vom 1. bis 3. Maerz 1993. ed. by Calließ, Joerg and Merkel, Christine M. Loccumer Protokolle 7. Loccum: Evangelische Akademie Loccum: 443-453
- . (1995) 'Verona Forum: Una voce comune per l'ex-Jugoslavia.' In Per un modello di difesa nonviolento. Che cosa ci insegna il conflitto nella Ex-Jugoslavia? Atti del IV Convegno Nazionale di Ricerca sulla Difesa Popolare Nonviolenta, Vicenza 6-7 novembre 1993. ed. by Drago, Antonino and Soccio, Matteo. Venezia:Editoria Universitaria:274-276
- Langewiesche, William (2001) 'Peace is Hell'. The Atlantic, October. [online] available from <http://www.theatlantic.com/issues/2001/10/langewiesche.htm> [1.11.2001]
- Langreiter, Christiana (1997) 'Eine Keimzelle des Vertrauens'. Friedensdienste 6, 13-16
- Large, Judith (n.d.) The war next door. A study of second-track intervention during the war in ex-Yugoslavia. (c. 1997). Lansdown:Hawthorn Press
- Last, David (2003) 'From Peacekeeping to Peacebuilding.' The Online Journal of Peace and Conflict Resolution 5.1 Summer:1-8. [online] available from <www.trinstitute.org/ojpcr/5_1last.htm> [4.4.2003]
- Laubenthal, Ulli (1992) Brief an Irmgard Ehrenberger vom World Peace and Relief Team, Wien, datiert Neuwied, 21.August (letter)
- Laurence, Pierre (1993) 'Solidarité civile. Voyage en Macédoine et au Kosovo.' Non-Violence Actualité No 166, 6-7
- Laurence, Tim (1999) Humanitarian Assistance and Peacekeeping: An Uneasy Alliance? Whitehall Papers Series No 48, London:Royal United Services Institute for Defence Studies
- Lavoyer, Jean-Philippe (1998) 'International Humanitarian Law, Protected Zones and the Use of Force.' In UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations

- in a Civil War-like Conflict. ed. by Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin. Hants/Brookfield: Ashgate: 262-279
- Layne, Christopher (2000a) 'Miscalculations and Blunders lead to War.' In NATO's Empty Victory. A Postmortem on the Balkan War. ed. by Carpenter, Ted Galen. Washington: Cato Institute: 11-20
- . (2000b) 'Collateral Damage in Yugoslavia.' In NATO's Empty Victory. A Postmortem on the Balkan War. ed. by Carpenter, Ted Galen. Washington: Cato Institute: 51-58
- Le Meut, Christian (1991) 'Ils agissent pour la paix.' Non-Violence Actualité No 152, November, 18-21
- . (1992) 'Ex-Yougoslavie. Résistance civile au Kosovo.' Non-Violence Actualité No 159-160, 13
- . (1994) 'Les volontaires de la solidarité.' Non-Violence Actualité no 177, February, 10
- . (1995a) 'Le droit d'asile une nouvelle fois bafoué.' Non-Violence Actualité 189, March, 10-11
- . (1995b) 'Une urgence pour la communauté internationale.' Non-Violence Actualité No 193, July-August, 4-5
- . (1996) 'Ex-Yougoslavie: Le Kosovo après Dayton.' Non-Violence Actualité No 206, October, 10-11
- . (1997) 'L'information en ex-Yougoslavie. La démocratie aime AIM'. Non-Violence Actualité No 219, December, 24
- . (1998) 'La communauté internationale intervient au Kosovo. Une ingérence nécessaire.' Non-Violence Actualité No 229, November, 24
- . (1998) 'Kosovo. Comment faire face à la catastrophe?' Non-Violence Actualité No 25, May, 8-10
- 'Le Prix Nobel de la Paix 1996 pour Ibrahim Rugova' (1995) Non-Violence Actualité No 196, November, 21
- Leatherman, Janie (1999) 'Catholic Relief Services' Peacebuilding Role in the Republic of Macedonia: Using Humanitarian Assistance to Promote Democratic Awareness and Civic Participation.' In Theory and Practice in Ethnic Conflict Management. Theorizing Success and Failure. ed. by Ross, Marc Howard and Rothman, Jay. London/New York: Macmillan Press/St. Martin's Press: 81-102
- Leatherman, Janie, DeMars, William, Gaffney, Patrick D. and Vaeyrynen, Raimo (1999) Breaking Cycles of Violence. Conflict Prevention in Intrastate Crises. West Hartford: Kumarian Press
- Lederach, John Paul (1995) 'Conflict Transformation in Protracted Internal Conflicts: The Case for a Comprehensive Framework.' In Conflict Transformation. ed. by Rupesinghe, Kumar. London/New York: MacMillan Press/St. Martin's Press: 201-222
- . (1997) Building Peace. Sustainable Reconciliation in Divided Societies. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press
- . (2001) 'Civil Society and Reconciliation.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 841-854
- Lees, Lorraine M. (1997) Keeping Tito Afloat. The United States, Yugoslavia, and the Cold War. Pennsylvania State University Press
- Lehmann, Christophe (1999) 'SFOR support to Solidarité', First published in SFOR Informer #66, 21 July, 1999 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/cimic/solidarite/t990723.htm> [16.10.2002]
- Leitner, Johannes et al (2000) 'Peace Teams in Slawonien'. Friedensdienst 4, 17-19

- Lelong, Yavier (1994) 'Kosovo: Ibrahim Rugova à Paris'. Non-Violence Actualité no 177, February, 9
- Leonhardt, Manuela (2000) 'Improving Capacities and Procedures for Formulating and Implementing Effective Conflict Prevention Strategies – An Overview of Recent Donor Initiatives.' In The Impact of Conflict Prevention Policy. Cases, Measures, Assessments. ed. by Lund, Michael and Rasamoelina, Guenola SWP – Conflict Prevention Network (SWP-CPN) Yearbook 1999/2000, Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 89-112
- . (2001) 'The Challenge of Linking Aid and Peacebuilding.' In Peace-building. A Field Guide. ed. by Reyhler, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania. London/Boulder: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 238-245
- Leurdijk, Dick A. (1996) The United Nations and NATO in Former Yugoslavia, 1991-1996. Limits to Diplomacy and Force. The Hague: The Netherlands Atlantic Commission
- Lewer, Nick (1999) International Non-Government Organisations and Peacebuilding – Perspectives from Peace Studies and Conflict Resolution. Working Paper 3, Bradford: Centre for Conflict Resolution
- Lewer, Nick and Ramsbotham, Oliver (1993) 'Something Must Be Done'. Towards an ethical framework for humanitarian intervention in international social conflict. Peace Research Report No 33, University of Bradford
- Libal, Michael (1997) Limits of Persuasion. Germany and the Yugoslav Crisis, 1991-1992. Westport/London: Praeger
- Licht, Sonja (n.d.) Peace Caravan in Yugoslavia, 25-29 September 91. (letter)
- Licht, Sonja and Kaldor, Mary (1992) 'Nationalism and War, Civil Society and Peace'. Yugofax, 7-13
- Licklider, Roy (2001) 'Obstacles to Peace Settlements.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 697-718
- Liddell Hart, Basil H. (1967) 2nd edn. Strategy. London/New York et al: Penguin
- Life and Peace Institute (1992) The Role of the Churches in Yugoslavia: A Research Project. Accompanying letters by John Paul Lederach and others. (letter, received by author 18.March)
- Lindgren, G., Wallensteen, P. and Nordquist, K.A. (eds.) (1990) Issues in Third World Conflict Resolution. Uppsala: Department of Peace and Conflict Research
- Lindholm, Helena (1991) 'Nationalist Movements: The Palestinian Intifada and Kosovo Compared'. Spectrum. Schlaining: European University Center for Peace Studies
- Lindorfer, Simone (2004) Erinnerungen heilen langsam... Bericht (Auszüge) ueber die Situation von psychosozialer Traumatisierung und Traumaarbeit in Rwanda und Burundi. Written for Misereor. (paper)
- Link. Netzwerk for Globalt Fellesskap (1994), no 2. Sandefjord
- Lipsius, Stephan (1998) 'Untergrundorganisationen im Kosovo. Ein Ueberblick.' Suedosteuropa, 47. Jhg., (1-2) 75-82
- Lischke, Eduard (1997) 'Beispiel internationaler Krisenintervention: Bosnien.' In Eingreifen - aber wie? Internationale Krisenintervention. Tagung in Zusammenarbeit mit Ohne Ruestung Leben vom 14. bis 16. Maerz 1997 in der Evangelischen Akademie Bad Boll, Materialien 8/97 der Evangelischen Akademie Bad Boll: 9-10
- Liversage, Toni (1994) 'Supporting deserters from ex-Yugoslavia – a way of working for peace?'. hCa Quarterly No 9, Spring, 7-8. Reprint also in Peaceful Settlement of Conflict II – A Task for Civil Society: Third Party Intervention, Dokumentation einer

- Tagung vom 16.-18. März 1994. ed. by Calließ, Joerg and Merkel, Christine M.
 Loccumer Protokolle 9. Loccum: Evangelische Akademie Loccum 1995: 263-265
- Llamazares, Monica and Reynolds Levy, Laina (2003) NGOs and Peacebuilding in Kosovo.
 University of Bradford, Centre for Conflict Resolution, Working Paper 13
- Local Non-Governmental, Non-Profit Organizations' (1997) Yugoslav Survey No 4-38, Belgrade
- Loquai, Heinz (2000) Der Kosovo-Konflikt - Wege in einen vermeidbaren Krieg. Die Zeit von Ende November 1997 bis März 1999. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft
- Lubbers, Tanya and Wagenaar, Agnes (2001) Pax Christi-Macedonia Report (October 2000-February 2001).Ref: FDV/MAC/D001b.2001. Antwerpen
- Lucarelli, Sonia (2000) Europe and the Breakup of Yugoslavia. A Political Failure in Search of a Scholarly Explanation. The Hague: Kluwer Law International
- Lucas, Rainer (2002) 'Mitwirkung des Bundesministeriums fuer Wirtschaft und Technologie beim Stabilisierungsprozess in Suedosteuropa'. In Deutsche Konfliktbewaeltigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 115-125
- Lukac, Davor (2002) 'Serbia in Crisis after Coalition Collapse'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 35 (part 1), 2. August
- Lukic, Djurdjevic (2000) 'Yugoslavia Joins Pact'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 189, 27.October
- Lund, Michael S. (1996) Preventing Violent Conflicts. A Strategy for Preventive Diplomacy.
 Washington:USIP Press
- . (2000a) 'Introduction and Overview. 'In *The Impact of Conflict Prevention Policy.
 Cases, Measures, Assessments*. ed. by Lund, Michael and Rasamoelina, Guenola SWP –
 Conflict Prevention Network (SWP-CPN) Yearbook 1999/2000, Baden-Baden:Nomos
 Verlagsgesellschaft: 11-21
- . (2000b) 'Improving Conflict Prevention by Learning from Experience: Issues, Approaches and Results.' In The Impact of Conflict Prevention Policy. Cases, Measures, Assessments. ed. by Lund, Michael and Rasamoelina, Guenola SWP – Conflict Prevention Network (SWP-CPN) Yearbook 1999/2000, Baden-Baden:Nomos
 Verlagsgesellschaft: 63-88
- . (2000c) 'Preventive Diplomacy for Macedonia, 1992-1999: From Containment to Nation
 Building.' In Opportunities Missed, Opportunities Seized. Preventive Diplomacy in the Post-Cold War World. ed. by Jentleson, Bruce W. Lanham: Rowman & Littlefield: 173-208
- . (2001) 'A Toolbox for Responding to Conflicts and Building Peace.' In *Peace-building.
 A Field Guide*. ed. by Reychler, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania. London/Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 16-20
- . (2004) 'Operationalising the Lessons from Recent Experience in Field-level Conflict Prevention Strategies.' In Facing Ethnic Conflicts. Towards a New Realism. Ed. by Andreas Wimmer et al. Lanham et al: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers, 2004: 120-140
- Lund, Michael and Rasamoelina, Guenola (eds.) (2000) The Impact of Conflict Prevention Policy. Cases, Measures, Assessments. SWP – Conflict Prevention Network (SWP-CPN)
Yearbook 1999/2000, Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft
- Luethke, Karsten (2001) 'Fluechtlinge in Suedosteuropa: Destabilisierung durch Aufnahme und Rueckkehr?'. In Suedosteuropa auf dem Weg zu Demokratie und Stabilitaet?, Referate einer Tagung vom 10. bis 12. November 2000 in der Evangelischen Akademie
 Bad Boll. epd-Dokumentation Nr 9/01, 26. February, 27-30

- Lutz, Dieter S. (2001) 'Vorwort von Prof. Dieter S. Lutz', in Die Neue NATO, Irak und Jugoslawien. By Ronnefeldt, Clemens, Minden: Internationaler Versöhnungsbund
- Lutz, Dieter S. and Tudyka, Kurt P. (eds.) (1999/2000) Perspektiven und Defizite der OSZE. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft
- Lyons, James (2007) 'Overcoming Ethnic Politics in Bosnia? Achievements and Obstacles to European Integration.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin: Lit Verlag: 49-68
- Lyons, Terrence (2002) 'The Role of Postsettlement Elections.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elizabeth M. Boulder and London: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 215-235
- MacKenzie, Lewis (1993) Peacekeeper. The Road to Sarajevo. Vancouver: Douglas & McIntyre
- Maclay, Michael (1998) 'Bosnian Tightrope'. Transitions Vol 5, No 8, August, 20-23
- Macrae, Joanna and Leader, Nicholas (2000) 'The Politics of Coherence: The UK government's approach to linking political and humanitarian responses to complex political emergencies.' In HPG. Research in Focus No 1, ed. by Overseas Development Institute. [online] available from <http://www.odi.org.uk/hpg/papers/researchinfocus1.pdf> [3.4.2003]
- Mader, Gerald, Eberwein, Wolf-Dieter and Vogt, Wolfgang R. (eds.) (2001) Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung. Eine internationale Herausforderung. Schriftenreihe des OESFK-Studien fuer europaeische Friedenspolitik vol 8. Muenster: agenda Verlag
- Magas, Branka (1993) The Destruction of Yugoslavia. Tracking the Break-up 1980-92. London: Verso
- Magas, Branka and Zanic, Ivo (eds.) (2001) The War in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina, 1991-1995. London: Frank Cass
- Mahony, Liam (2002) Unarmed Monitoring and Human Rights Field Presence: Civilian Protection and Conflict Prevention. An analysis based on a Consultation hosted by the Rockefeller Foundation and the International Institute for Strategic Studies, March 14. London: Arundel House
- Mahony, Liam (2004) Side by Side. Protecting and encouraging threatened activists with unarmed international accompaniment. Minneapolis: The Center for Victims of Torture
- Mahony, Liam (2006) Proactive Presence. Field strategies for civilian protection. Geneva: Henry Dunant Centre for Humanitarian Dialogue
- Mahony, Liam and Eguren, Luis Enrique (1997) Unarmed Bodyguards. International Accompaniment for the Protection of Human Rights. West Hartford: Kumarian Press
- Maier-Witt, Silke (2000) 'Ein Alltag in Prizren'. In Ziviler Friedensdienst. Fachleute fuer den Frieden. Idee – Erfahrungen – Ziele. ed. by Evers, Tilman Opladen: Leske + Budrich: 323-329
- Major, April and Reenock, Christopher (1999) 'Building Computer Connectivity in the Legal Information Infrastructure of Bosnia.' In Three Dimensions of Peacebuilding in Bosnia. Findings from USIP-Sponsored Research and Field Projects. Peaceworks 32. ed. by Riskin, Steven M. December. [online] available from www.uip.org/pubs/peaceworks/pwks32.pdf [25.6.2003], 18-21
- Malazogu, Leon (2003) 'When Doves Support War and Hawks Oppose It: An Analysis of Humanitarian Intervention in Kosova.' In Understanding the War in Kosovo. ed. by Bieber, Florian and Daskalovski, Zidas London/Portland: Frank Cass Publishers: 125-145

- Malik, Salma (2003) 'American Media and the War in the Balkans. A Pakistani Perspective.' Alternatives. Turkish Journal of International Relations Vol 2, No 1. [online] available from <www.alternativesjournal.net/volume2/number1/malik.pdf> [10.6.2008]
- Maliqi, Shkelzen (1995) 'Kosovo: politiche di resistenza'. In: Per un modello di difesa nonviolento. Che cosa ci insegna il conflitto nella Ex-Jugoslavia? Atti del IV Convegno Nazionale di Ricerca sulla Difesa Popolare Nonviolenta, Vicenza 6-7 novembre 1993. ed. by Drago, Antonino and Soccio, Matteo. Venezia:Editoria Universitaria:53-56
- . (1996) 'Broken April'. Warreport No 41, May, 3-4
- . (2001) 'Putin Offers Kosovars Little'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report, No 257, 20. June
- . (n.d.-a) Demand for a New Status. The Albanian Movement in Kosovo. (paper)
- . (n.d.-b) Europe and Albanians. (paper)
- Maloney, Sean M. (1997) 'Operation Bolster: Canada and the European Community Monitor Mission in Former Yugoslavia, 1991-92.' International Peacekeeping (ed Frank Cass, London), Vol 4, No 1, Spring, 26-50
- Mandrino, Mirko (1995) Support young people from Kosovo, Vojvodina & Serbia to take part at International Summer Camp. 25 April. (e-mail)
- Mappes-Niediek, Norbert (2003) Balkan-Mafia. Staaten in der Hand des Verbrechens - Eine Gefahr fuer Europa. Berlin:Ch. Links Verlag
- Marcon, Giulio (2000) Dopo il Kosovo. Le guerre nei Balcani e la costruzione della pace. Trieste:Asterios Editore
- Maric, Nikola (n.d.) Der Beitrag internationaler NGOs zur Staerkung der Zivilgesellschaft im Global Governance Prozess- Fallbeispiel Kroatien. (Paper)
- Markovic, Brana (2000) Yugoslav Crisis and the World. Chronology of Events. January 1990 – December 1995. Belgrade: Institute of International Politics and Economics
- Martin, G. (1995) 'Nach dem Fall der "UN-Schutzzonen" Srebrenica and Zepa. Ein bosnischer Friedhof vor Kohls Haustuer.' pogrom 184, August/September:58
- Martinelli, Marta (2002) 'Developing a Civilian Peace Corps: Does Italy Offer a Model for the EU?' In: Peace, Conflict & Development. An interdisciplinary Journal Vol 1/1.[online] available from <www.peacestudiesjournal.org/uk/archives> [3.4.2003]
- Mascolo, Georg (2005) 'Robert Helvey. Der Umsturz Helfer.' Spiegel Online. [online] available from <<http://www.spiegel.de/politik/ausland/0,1518,druck-386006,00.html>> [2.4.2008]
- Mathews, Dylan (2001) war prevention works. 50 stories of people resolving conflict. Oxford: Oxford Research Group
- Matic, Tanja and Stojanovic, Olivera (2004) 'Kosovo Serbs Return to Foreign Country'. Balkan Crisis Report No 480, 13. February
- Matic, Tatjana (2003) 'Serbia Angered by Kosovo Privatisation'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 433, 1. June
- Matthies, Volker (1993) 'Der Schrecken des Krieges und die (Ohn)Macht der internationalen Gemeinschaft.' In Frieden durch Einmischung? Der Schrecken des Krieges und die (Ohn)Macht der internationalen Gemeinschaft. ed. by Matthies, Volker. Bonn:Dietz: 7-23
- . (2003) 'Konfliktpraevention – Konfliktnachsorge.' In 'Gerechter Friede' – Weltgemeinschaft in der Verantwortung. Zur Debatte um die Friedensschrift der Deutschen Bischoefe. ed. by Justenhoven, Heinz-Gerhard, and Rolf Schumacher Theologie und Frieden 25. Stuttgart: 206-216.
- . (ed.) (1993) Frieden durch Einmischung? Der Schrecken des Krieges und die (Ohn)Macht der internationalen Gemeinschaft. Bonn:Dietz

- . (ed.) (1997) Der gelungene Frieden. Beispiele und Bedingungen erfolgreicher friedlicher Konfliktbearbeitung. EINE Welt-Texte der Stiftung Entwicklung und Frieden Vol 4. Bonn:Dietz
- Matveeva, Anna and Paes, Wolf-Christian (2003) The Kosovo Serbs: An Ethnic Minority Between Collaboration and Defiance. Bonn:BICC/ Friedrich Naumann Foundation/Saferworld
- Matveeva, Anna, with Hiscock,Duncan, Paes, Wolf-Christian and Risser, Hans (2003) Macedonia: Guns, Policing and Ethnic Division. Bonn: Saferworld and BICC
- Maurer, Daniel (2001) 'Europäische Sicherheit: Konfliktmanagement am Beispiel 'Ex-Jugoslawien'.' Zuercher Beiträage zur Sicherheitspolitik und Konfliktforschung No 59, Zuerich:FSK
- Mauro, Maria Teresa, Lakicevic, Dragan, Lutovac, Zoran and Pantic, Danijel (2002) 'Serbia: A New Beginning Taking Shape.' In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette. Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 322-339
- May, Tim (2001³) Social Research. Issues, Methods and Process Buckingham/Phildelphia: Open University Press
- 'Mazedonien im Umbruch' (2003). medienhilfe info 3, 1
- 'Mazedonien unter EU-Druck' (2001) die tageszeitung 6. October:11
- 'Mazedonien. Rueckblick und Ausblick' (2002) medienhilfe info, 3
- 'Mazedonier fordern ihre Rechte ein' (1990) die tageszeitung 21. May:9
- Mazowiecki, Tadeusz (1995) Situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. Tenth periodic report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. Submitted by Mr. Tadeusz Mazowiecki, Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, pursuant to paragraph 37 of the Commission resolution 1994/72 of 9 March 1994
- McCallister, Richard (2001) 'French Perceptions.' In Kosovo. Perceptions of War and its Aftermath. ed by Buckley, Mary and Cummings,Sally N. London:continuum: 92-105
- McHugh, Gerard and Bessler, Manuel (2006) Humanitarian Negotiations with Armed Groups. A Manual for Practitioners. New York:United Nations
- McMahon, Patrice C. (2001) What have we done? Evaluating international involvement in Bosnia. Paper prepared for 2001 ISA Convention, Chicago 2001, [online] available from <www.isanet.org/archive/mcmahon.htm> [15.3.2003]
- McRae, Brad (2001) 'Breaking the Impasse: Negotiation and Mediation Strategies.' In Negotiation in International Conflict. Understanding Persuasion. ed. by Goodwin, Deborah. London:Frank Cass:31-44
- Meder, Gerhard and Reimann, Michael (1996) Chronik des Bosnien-Konfliktes. Diskussionsbeiträge Nr. 33/1996 der Projektgruppe Friedensforschung der Universitaet Konstanz, Konstanz.
- Medica e.V., Medica Zenica und Bruecke nach Bosnien-Herzegowina e.V. (n.d.) Konvoi fuer Bosnien. Logistic Service-OEN/Medica gegrundet. (c.1993). (paper)
- Medica Mondiale (1996) Rundbrief Nr 7, November
- Medienhilfe Ex-Jugoslawien (1997) Professionelle Solidaritaet gegen Nationalismus und Chauvinismus. Seminar "Building Peace from the Roots" - 27.10 - 01.11 1997 - Trogen (CH)
- . (2000) Jahresbericht 2000
- 'Medienvielfalt im Kosov@' (2001) medienhilfe Ex-Jugoslawien, No 2

- Meeting of the Steering Committee 'Peace Island Vis* (1992), 9.June, minutes of the meeting, written by Christine Schweitzer, 17.June (minutes)
- Meier, Viktor (1995) Wie Jugoslawien verspielt wurde. Muenchen: Verlag C.H. Beck
- . (2002) 'Die politische Bedeutung der Medien in der Konfliktbewaeltigung.' In Deutsche Konfliktbewaeltigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 139-150
- Melcic, Dunja (ed.) (1999) Der Jugoslawien-Krieg. Handbuch zu Vorgeschichte, Verlauf und Konsequenzen. Opladen/Wiesbaden: Westdeutscher Verlag
- Mellenthin, Knut (1992) 'Jugoslawien. NATO-Intervention rueckt naeher.' analyse & kritik, 16 December. [online] available from <http://www.knutmellenthin.de/artikel/archiv/jugoslawien/jugoslawien-nato-intervention-rueckt-naeher-16121992.html> [4.6.2008]
- Mendelson, Sarah E. (2002) 'Conclusion: The Power and Limits of Transnational Democracy Networks in Postcommunist Societies'. in: The Power and Limits of NGOs. A Critical Look at Building Democracy in Eastern Europe and Eurasia. ed. by Mendelson, Sarah E. and Glenn, John K, New York: Columbia University Press: 232-251
- Mendelson, Sarah E. and Glenn, John K. (2000) Democracy Assistance and NGO Strategies in Post-Communist Societies. Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Democracy and Rule of Law Project. Working Papers No 8, February. [online] available from www.ceip.org/files/Publications/demoNGO.asp?from=pubauthor [25.6.2003]
- Mendelson, Sarah E. and Glenn, John K. (eds.) (2002) The Power and Limits of NGOs. A Critical Look at Building Democracy in Eastern Europe and Eurasia. New York: Columbia University Press
- 'Menschenrechtler : UCK hinter Gewalttaten' (1999) die tageszeitung 4. August: 2
- Mercier, Michèle (1995) Crimes Without Punishment. Humanitarian Action in Former Yugoslavia. London: Pluto Press
- Merlingen, Michael and Mujic, Zenet (2002) 'Die OSZE-Mission in Kroatien – Die Sicht aus Zagreb.' In OSZE-Jahrbuch 2002. ed. by Institut fuer Friedensforschung und Sicherheitspolitik an der Universitaet Hamburg. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 209-220
- Mertus, Julie A. (1999) Kosovo. How Myths and Truths Started a War. Berkeley: University of California Press
- Messervy-Whiting, Graham (1994) Peace Conference on Former Yugoslavia: The Political-Military Interface. London: Centre for Defence Studies
- Meyer zum Felde, Rainer (2002) 'Die deutsche Mitwirkung an den Friedensmissionen in Bosnien und Herzegowina nach Dayton aus militaerpolitischer Sicht.' In Deutsche Konfliktbewaeltigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 57- 101
- Meyer, Carsten (2000) 'Das Benkovac-Projekt von Pax Christi in Kroatien. Der Weg zur Versoehnng im Balkan ist lang, sehr lang'. In Ziviler Friedensdienst. Fachleute fuer den Frieden. Idee – Erfahrungen – Ziele. ed. by Evers, Tilman. Opladen: Leske + Budrich: 309-316
- Meyer, David S. (1999) 'How the Cold War Was Really Won: The Effects of the Antinuclear Movements of the 1980s.' In How Social Movements Matter. ed. by Guigni, Marco, McAdam, Doug and Tilly, Charles. Minneapolis/London: University of Minnesota Press: 182-203

- Meyssan, Thierry (2007) Soft and Undercover Coups d'Etats. The Albert Einstein Institution: non-violence according to the CIA. [online] available from http://venezuelasolidarity.org.uk/ven/web/2007/under_cover_coups.html < [7.5.2008]
- Mi za mir (1992) Why we are unique and what we have accomplished so far.... March. (leaflet)
- . (1994) Letters and documentation sent to Christine Schweitzer by Nives Rebernak, Amsterdam dated 23 March (letters)
- . (ed.) (1994) Dialogue. Magazine for Cultural Communication and Common Sense, no 3, March/April
- Miall, Hugh (1999/2000) 'Preventing Potential Conflicts: Assessing the Impact of 'Light' and 'Deep' Conflict Prevention in Central and Eastern Europe and the Balkans.' In The Impact of Conflict Prevention Policy. Cases, Measures, Assessments. ed. by Lund, Michael and Rasamoelina, Guenola SWP – Conflict Prevention Network (SWP-CPN) Yearbook 1999/2000, Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 23-45
- Miall, Hugh (2004) 'Conflict Transformation: A Multi-Dimensional Task.' In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- Miall, Hugh, Ramsbotham, Oliver and Woodhouse, Tom (1999) Contemporary Conflict Resolution. The Prevention, Management and Transformation of Deadly Conflicts. Cambridge: Polity Press
- Michas, Takis (2002) Unholy Alliance. Greece and Milosevic's Serbia. Texas: A&M University Press
- 'Migration auf der Tagesordnung' (1991) die tageszeitung 26. January: 8
- Mijovic, Ljiljana (2001) 'Human Rights in B-H.' In International Support Policies to SEE Countries – Lessons (not) learned in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Sarajevo, August. ed. by Fond Otvoreno Drustvo Bosne I Hercegovine: 169-187. [online] available from <<http://www.soros.org.ba/en/dokumenti/ostali/book/>> [8.11.2003]
- Mijovic, Milka Tadic (2002) 'Montenegro: Djukanovic Plots Comeback'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 324, 15. March
- Mikic, Ljubomir (2003) Intervention to the UN Commission on Human Rights, Sub-commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, 9th Session of the UN Working Group on Minorities, May 12 – 16, 2003, Geneva. [online] available from <<http://www2.ohchr.org/english/issues/minorities/docs/center%20for%20peace.doc>> [25.6.2008]
- Milasinovic, Snjezana (1995) 'Report of International Volunteer Working Camp, Pakrac'. In Peaceful Settlement of Conflict II – A Task for Civil Society: Third Party Intervention, Dokumentation einer Tagung vom 16.-18. März 1994. ed. by Calließ, Joerg and Merkel, Christine M. Locomer Protokolle 9. Locom: Evangelische Akademie Locom: 255-262
- Milosevic, Milan (1996) 'Still Searching for a Solution'. Warreport No 46, October, 35
- . (2000) Die Parteienlandschaft Serbiens. Ed. Heinrich Boell-Stiftung. Berlin: Berlin-Verlag 2000
- Minear, Larry and Weiss, Thomas G. (1995) Mercy Under Fire. War and the Global Humanitarian Community. Boulder: Westview Press
- Minnesota Coalition (1994) War crimes. Email sent by Johanna Bjorken, 14. October (e-mail)

- Mitchell, Christopher (1993) 'The Process and Stages of Mediation: The Sudanese Cases.' In Making War and Waging Peace ed. by Smock, David R. Washington:USIP Press
- Moeller, Wolfgang (1997) 'Makedonien: Konfliktverhuetung durch praeventive Stationierung von UN-Blauhelmen.' In Der gelungene Frieden. Beispiele und Bedingungen erfolgreicher friedlicher Konfliktbearbeitung. ed. by Matthies, Volker. EINE Welt-Texte der Stiftung Entwicklung und Frieden Vol 4. Bonn:Dietz : 278-304
- Molland, Halvar (1997) 'CIMIC in Croatia', First published in SFOR Informer #26, December 24. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/cimic/zagreb/cimiccro.htm> [16.10.2002]
- . (1998) 'UK troops inspect ammunition factory', First published in SFOR Informer #28, January 28. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/sfor-at-work/uk-inspect/ukinsp.> [14.10.2002]
- Moore, Carol (1999) 1999 Washington, D.C. Protests Against the US-NATO-Bombings of Yugoslavia. [online] available from <<http://www.carolmoore.net/photos/balkans-photos.html>> [1.6.2008]
- Morillon, Philippe (1993) Croire et oser. Chronique de Sarajevo. Paris :Éditions Grasset & Fasquelle
- Moser-Puagsuwan, Yeshua (1996) Peace Teams / Peace Services Information Networker, No 8, November 1996 (follow-up newsletter to Peace Team News, ed. by Friends Peace Teams Project, c/ BYM, Sandy Spring, USA)
- Moser-Puagsuwan, Yeshua and Weber, Thomas (2000) 'Nonviolent Humanitarian Intervention: A Framework for the Future'. In Nonviolent Intervention Across Borders. A Recurrent Vision. ed. by Moser-Puagsuwan, Yeshua and Weber, Thomas. Honolulu: Spark M. Matsunaga Institute for Peace:319-337
- . (eds.) (2000) Nonviolent Intervention Across Borders. A Recurrent Vision. Honolulu: Spark M. Matsunaga Institute for Peace
- Mouvement de la paix (1992a) Communiqué de presse. Appel international pour la paix dans l'Ex-Yougoslavie, 30. July. (press release)
- . (1992b) YOUGO-INFOS. Bulletin d'information édité par le Mouvement de la paix, Octobre. (brochure)
- . (1993a) Appel International pour la Paix en Ex-Yougoslavie, le 3 mars. (press release)
- . (1993b) Press release: Ex-Yougoslavie. Saint-Ouen, 27.January. (press release)
- . (1993c) Soutien au rassemblement du 8 Janvier pour la paix dans l'ex-Yougoslavie. Saint-Ouen, 5 January. (press release)
- Mouvement pour une Alternative Non violente and Assemblée européenne des citoyens (1993) Compte rendu de voyage avec un convoi d'Equilibre, du 28 Avril au 9 Mai 1993. (report)
- Mouvement pour une alternative non-violente (1994) La résistance civile au Kosovo. Rapport de mission de la délégation du MAN. Réédition Janvier. (report)
- . (1999) Mission effectuée au KOSOVO du 8 au 20 juillet 1999 dans le cadre de ,Partner for Kosovo. 23.July. (report)
- Muhic, Ferid (2001) 'Comment: The Devil of Perversity'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report, No 246, 11. May
- Mueller, Annemarie (2000) 'Das serbische Volk ist ans Kreuz genagelt, keiner weiß, wann es absteigen wird'. Eindruecke einer dreiwoechigen Reise im Fruehjahr 2000 durch die BR Jugoslawien. Dresden:Druckerei & Verlag Christoph Hille

- Mueller, Barbara (1995) Passiver Widerstand im Ruhrkampf. Eine Fallstudie zur gewaltlosen zwischenstaatlichen Konfliktaustragung und ihren Erfolgsbedingungen. Muenster:Lit
- . (2000) Einige neue Gedanken ueber den OEFD Letter to the participants of the Reflection Workshop on the OEFD, written 19 March. (paper)
- . (2000a) Alles paletti beim Bruecken bauen in Becej? Local Capacity for Peace Workshop 12.-15. Dezember 2000. (paper)
- . (2000b) Workshop-Unterlagen. Materials for a workshop given in March 2000 to Austrian Peace Services. (various papers)
- . (2001) 'Konfliktursachen in der Konfliktbearbeitung – Ein Problemaufriss zum Verhaeltnis von Konfliktursachen zu Arbeitsfeldern der zivilen Konfliktbearbeitung.' In Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung. Eine internationale Herausforderung. Schriftenreihe des OESFK-Studien fuer europaeische Friedenspolitik vol 8. ed by Mader, Gerald, Eberwein, Wolf-Dieter and Vogt, Wolfgang R. Muenster:agenda Verlag:27-45
- . (2002) Moeglichkeiten der Foerderung von Friedensallianzen in Konfliktregionen durch externe Basisorganisationen. Bericht ueber ein Aktionsforschungsprojekt in Kroatien. IFGK Arbeitspapier No 17, Wahlenau:IFGK
- . (2004) The Balkan Peace Team 1994-2001. Nonviolent Intervention in Crisis Areas with the Deployment of Volunteer Teams. Stuttgart: ibidem Verlag
- . (2005) Survey on the German Language Literature on Conflict. Social Development Papers. Conflict Prevention and Reconstruction, No 28. World Bank, Washington. [online] available from <<http://www-wds.worldbank.org/external/default/main?c185s488>> [24.5.08]
- Mueller, Barbara and Buettner, Christian (1998) Optimizing Peacekeeping, Peacemaking and Peacebuilding through nonviolent Intervention? A methodological and systematic operationalisation. Working Paper No 6 of the Institute for Peace Work and Nonviolent Conflict Transformation. Wahlenau:IFGK
- Mueller, Heidrun (1999) 'Flucht in die Diplomatie. Rußland und der Kosovo-Konflikt.' antimilitarismus information 29. Jg, Heft 7, July 1999:66-70
- Muller, Jean Marie (1994) 'Couper le courant de violence.' Non-Violence Actualité no 178, March, 6-7
- . (1995) Principes et methodes de l'intervention civile. (paper)
- . (1999a) 'Intervention civile dans les régions en conflit. Comment agir pour la paix?' Non-Violence Actualité, février, 4-6
- . (1999b) 'Rétrouver les chemins de la paix.' Non-Violence Actualité No 236, June, 11
- . (2002) 'Le missioni internazionali. Le ONG come terza parte.' In Le Organizzazioni Non Governative e la trasformazione dei conflitti. Le operazioni di pace nelle crisi internazionali. Analisi, esperienze, prospettive. ed by Tullio, Francesco. Roma: Edizioni Associate Editrice Internazionale: 332-370
- Muenkler, Herfried (2003) 6th edn. Die neuen Kriege Reinbek b. Hamburg:rowohlt
- Mutz, Reinhard (2001) 'Am Frieden vorbeigeboht'. taz 20.February, 11
- Nachtwei, Winfried (2002) Friedensarbeit auf dem Balkan. Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung im ehemaligen Jugoslawien. Studienreise 7.-14.April 2002. Muenster.
- Nansen Academy (2008) Nansen Academy - the Norwegian Humanistic Academy. [online] available from <http://www.nansenskolen.no/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=57&Itemid=95> [11.7.2008]

- Nansen Dijalog Centar (2008) Nansen Dialogue Network. [online] available from <<http://www.ndcsarajevo.org/index.php?l=en>> [11.7.2008]
- Narr, Wolf-Dieter and Vack, Klaus (1991) Streibarar Pazifismus! Friedenspolitik und Friedensbewegung nach dem Golfkrieg. Ed. by Komitee fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie, Sensbachtal
- Narroll, R. (1964) 'On Ethnic Unit Classification.' In Current Anthropology No 5, 283-291
- National Peace Council (1992a) Minutes of the Balkans Working Group meeting held on Thursday 15 October. (minutes)
- . (1992b) Minutes of the Balkans Working Group meeting held on Wednesday 18 November. (minutes)
- . (1992c) Minutes of the Balkans Working Group meeting 17. December. (minutes)
- . (1993a) Balkans Working Group. Letter 11 May 1993, with leaflet attached. (letter)
- . (1993b) Minutes of the Balkans Working Group meeting Thursday 14 January. (minutes)
- . (1993c) Minutes of the Balkans Working Group meeting Thursday 18 March. (minutes)
- NATO (2000) NATO's Role in Bosnia and Herzegovina. [online] available from <<http://www.nato.int/docu/facts/2000/role-bih.htm>> [8.8.2004]
- NATO (2001) 'Joint Statement on the ceasefires in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.' NATO Press Release 101, 5 July
- 'Nato bleibt in Mazedonien' (2001) die tageszeitung 6. December:11
- 'Nato im Wartestand' (2001) die tageszeitung 15. August:2
- 'Nato prueft Verbleib in Skopje' (2001) die tageszeitung 17. September:13
- 'Nato-Einsatz unter Bundeswehr' (2001) die tageszeitung 24. September:9
- 'Nato-Truppen fuer Suedserbien?' (2001) die tageszeitung 2. March:2
- Nebel, Markus (2000) 'Neues Projekt VIMIO seit September 2000'. Friedensdienst 4, 25
- . (2001) 'Ein Jahr voll neuer Erlebnisse und Erfahrungen'. Friedensdienst 4, 23-24
- Neitzert, Juergen (1996) 'Zajedno pomoci- zajedno moliti (Gemeinsam beten – gemeinsam helfen). Interreligioese Zusammenarbeit fuer Frieden in Bosnien.' In Pax Christi Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:183-186
- Nenadic, Danijela and Belcevic, Nenad (2006). From Social Movement To Political Organisation: The Case of Otpor. Presentation at the URTF (Unarmed Resistance: the Transnational Factor) seminar July 2006. [online] available from <<http://www.civilresistance.info/seminars/urtf/Danijela>> [7.5.2008]
- Netherlands Helsinki Committee and Norwegian Helsinki Committee (1998) The Macedonian Side of the Conflict in Kosovo. Report of the Netherlands Helsinki Committee and the Norwegian Helsinki Committee in cooperation with the International Helsinki Federation for Human Right (IHF), Fact-Finding Mission to Macedonia, 25. September – 1. October 1998 (paper)
- Netzwerk Friedenskooperative (1992) Offener Brief an den Bundespraesidenten. Helfen Sie, damit die Todeslager endlich aufgeloeset werden! Bonn, 3. December
- . (1992a) Diskussionsforum: Die Alternative der Friedensbewegung zu militaerischer Intervention im ehem. Jugoslawien, 14. September 1992 in Bonn. (conference announcement)
- . (1992b) Einladung zum Presse-Hintergrundgespraeche, Dienstag, 29. September 1992. (press release)
- . (1994) Hilfe fuer ex-Jugoslawien. Eine Uebersicht. Stand: 1.6.1994, Bonn

- . (1995) Hilfe fuer ex-Jugoslawien. Eine UEbersicht, 2. ueberarbeite Auflage, Stand: August 1995, Bonn
- . (1996) Hilfe fuer ex-Jugoslawien. Eine UEbersicht, 4. ueberarbeite Auflage, Stand: 1. September 1996, Bonn
- . (1999a) Protestveranstaltungen gegen den NATO-Krieg. March. Bonn (paper)
- . (1999b) Stoppt den Krieg! Demo am 19. Juni in Koeln. Buendnis Koeln 99 & AG gegen den Krieg im Netzwerk Friedenskooperative, Sonderzeitung
- . (n.d.-a) Netzwerk Friedenskooperative in Zusammenarbeit mit Friedensgruppen Zum Thema: Stoppt den Krieg! (flyer)
- . (n.d.-b) NATO-Außenministerkonferenz: 'Dumm und gefaehrlich'. Friedensgruppen kritisieren NATO-Plaene zu militaerischen Interventionen. (press release)
- . (n.d.-c) Handeln statt schießen. Sonderzeitung. In Zusammenarbeit mit der OEkologie Stiftung NRW (c.1993), Bonn
- Neufeldt, Reina, McCann, Sarah and Cilliers, Jaco (2000) Explicit and Implicit Peacebuilding: Catholic Relief Services in Mindanao, Philippines and Bosnia-Herzegovina. CBDA/Life & Peace Institute
- Nikolic, Dragan (2001a) 'Skopje Diplomatic Rumpus'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report, No 207, 8. January
- Nikolic, Ivan (2001b) 'Yugoslavs Welcome Amnesty Law'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report, No 223 (part 2), 2. March
- Nikolic, Vanja (1993) 'Antiwar Campaign of Croatia, Report on Activities of the Antiwar Campaign of Croatia, July 1991-December 1992.' In Peaceful Settlement of Conflict - A Task for Civil Society. Friedliche Streitbeilegung als Gesellschaftsaufgabe. Dokumentation einer Tagung vom 1. bis 3. Maerz 1993. ed. by Calließ, Joerg and Merkel, Christine M. Locomer Protokolle 7. Locom: Evangelische Akademie Locom: 429-442
- Nitsche, Veronika (2000) 'Zenica Blues.' Friedensdienst 4, 13
- Non-Violence Actualité (1993a) Ex-Yougoslavie: Comment intervenir?, Non-Violence Actualité No 166, 1
- Non-Violence Actualité (1993b) 'Ex-Yougoslavie: Le Kosovo, interdit de convoi humanitaire.' Non-Violence Actualité No 170, 10
- . (1995a) Ex-Yougoslavie- Grève de la faim.' Non-Violence Actualité No 194, september, 11
- . (1995b) 'Special: Kosovo'. Non-Violence Actualité No 195, October
- . (1999a) 'Le MAN et le Kosovo. Pour un protectorat international.' Non-Violence Actualité No 235, May, 24
- . (1999b) 'Une action non-violente d'interpellation. Le jeune pour les Balkans.' Non-Violence Actualité No 236, June, 13
- 'NRW will fuer Rueckkehr der Roma zahlen' (1990) die tageszeitung 29. November:2
- Nußbaumer, Michael (1998) 'Solidaritaet, die nicht auf Ausschluß basiert...'. Friedensdienst 6, 20-21
- Nye Jr., Joseph S.(2001) 'Soft Power and Conflict Management in the Information Age.' Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 353-363

- O'Callaghan, Sorchia and Pantuliano, Sara (2007) Protective action. Incorporating civilian protection into humanitarian response. HPG Report 26, London: Humanitarian Policy Group
- O'Neill, Michael J. (1996) 'Preventive Diplomacy and the Media.' In Preventive Diplomacy. Stopping Wars Before They Start. ed. by Cahill, Kevin M. New York: Basic Books: 70-86
- O'Neill, William G. (2002) Kosovo. An Unfinished Peace. International Peace Academy occasional paper series, Boulder/London: Lynne Rienner Publishers
- Øberg, Jan (1994) 'Conflict Mitigation in Former Yugoslavia.' In Rethinking Peace. ed. by Elias, Robert and Turpin, Jennifer. Boulder & London: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 144-156
- . (1999) Preventing Peace. Sixty Examples of Conflict Mismanagement in Former Yugoslavia Since 1991. Lund: TFF
- . (2003) Macedonia 2002-2003. War, Peace or Something Else? An assessment of the risks of violence and war. Lund: TFF
- Ochsenstein, Jutta von (1994) 'Drei Wochen in einem Flüchtlingslager in Kroatien'. In Friedens- statt Militäreinsätze. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im Aufwind. ed. by Pax Christi. Probleme des Friedens 2-3. Idstein: Komzi Verlag: 78-85
- Oekumenischer Dienst – Schalomdiakonat (2008) A new perspective on conflict and violence: The OeD presents itself. [online] available from <<http://www.schalomdiakonat.de/www/english.html>> [15.7.2008]
- 'Offener Brief an die Friedensbewegungen' (1996) Written April 1994. In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein: Komzi-Verlag: 95-97
- 'Offensive bei Tetovo' (2001) die tageszeitung 23. March: 2
- Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (1998) Report from the Human Rights Field Operation in the region of the Former Yugoslavia, 29 May. (paper)
- Ogata, Sadako (1998) 'UNHCR in the Balkans. Humanitarian Action in the Midst of War'. In UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations in a Civil War-like Conflict. ed. by Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin. Hants/Brookfield: Ashgate: 186-199
- Ogawa, Ariyoshi (2001) 'The Building of Civil Society by 'Core' Europe?' In Reconstructing Multiethnic Societies: The Case of Bosnia-Herzegovina. Sokolovic, Dzamal and Bieber, Florian. Aldershot and Burlington: Ashgate: 135-144
- Ognjenovic, Vesna (2005) Es soll dir gut gehen! 50 Workshops fuer die sozialtherapeutische Arbeit mit traumatisierten Kindern und Erwachsenen. Weinheim/Muenchen: Juventa Verlag
- OHR (2003) General Information. [online] available from <www.ohr.int/ohr-info/gen-info/> [17.8.2003]
- Olson, Lara (2001) Dialogue Oriented Peace Efforts. Reflecting on Peace Practice: Issues Papers. CBDA and Life & Peace Institute. [online] available from <www.cdainc.com> [21.6.2003]
- Opancar, Christopher (2001) 'Montenegro – Welcome to the 3rd Millenium'. FriedensDienst 4, 10-12
- Open Society Institute (2008) About OSI. [online] available from <<http://www.soros.org/about>> [21.7.2008]

- Operation Amber Fox* (2004) [online] available from <<http://www.nato.int/fyrom/tff/home.htm>> [8.8.2004]
- Orentlicher, Diane F. (2008) Shrinking the Space for Denial: The Impact of the ICTY in Serbia. Open Society Institute. [online] available from <http://www.justiceinitiative.org/db/resource2?res_id=104091> [4.7.2008]
- Orsini, Dominique(2004) 'Case Study: EUPM in Bosnia and Herzegovina.' In Strengthening global security through addressing the root causes of conflict: Priorities for the Irish and Dutch Presidencies in 2004, Draft, January ed. by International Alert and Saferworld
- Orywal, Erwin (1996) 'Krieg und Frieden in den Wissenschaften.' In Krieg und Kampf. ed. by Orywal, Erwin, Rao, Aparna and Bollig, Michael. Berlin:Dietrich Reimer Verlag: 13-44
- Orywal, Erwin, Rao, Aparna and Bollig, Michael (eds.) (1996) Krieg und Kampf. Berlin:Dietrich Reimer Verlag
- OSCE (1998) The OSCE Missions of Long Duration in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina, March 1998 [online] available from <www.osce.org/news/surv_kos.htm> [9.8.2004]
- . (1999a) As Seen, As Told. An analysis of the human right findings of the OSCE Kosovo Verification Mission, October 1998 to June 1999. [online] available from <www.osce.org/kosovo/reports/hr/part1/> [9.12.99]
- . (1999b) Background Paper- Human Rights in Kosovo, Press Release: Reports: Human Rights in Kosovo. As seen, As Told, Part I-October 1998-June 1999, Part II – 14 June 1999 to 31 October 1999. [online] available from <www.osce.org/kosovo/reports/hr/> [9.12.99]
- . (1999c) 3rd edn. OSCE Handbook. published by the Secretariat of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe. Vienna
- . (1999d) Tense Christmas in Kosovo. [online] available from <www.osce.org/news/kvm-nl12.htm> [14.5.1999]
- . (1999e) Press Release No 10/99. [online] available from <www.osce.org/inst/secret/presrel/kpr10-99.htm> [14.5.1999]
- . (1999f) Press Release No 02/99. [online] available from <www.osce.org/inst/secret/presrel/kpr02-99.htm> [14.5.1999]
- . (2004a) OSCE and its role in Bosnia and Herzegovina. [online] available from <<http://www.oscebih.org/overview/mandate.asp?d=7>> [9.8.2004]
- . (2004b) OSCE Mandate. Articles of Understanding Concerning CSCE Spillover Monitor Mission To Skopje. [online] available from <http://www.osce.org/documents/mms/1992/09/520_en.pdf> [11.8.2004]
- . (2004c) OSCE Mission In Kosovo. [online] available from < <http://www.osce.org/kosovo/>> [9.8.2004]
- . (2004d) OSCE Mission Survey: The OSCE Missions of Long Duration in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina. [online] available from <<http://www.osce.org/publications/survey/survey26.htm>> [10.8.2004]
- . (2004e) OSCE Mission To Croatia. [online] available from <<http://www.osce.org/croatia/>> [9.8.2004]
- . (2004f) OSCE Mission To Serbia and Montenegro. [online] available from <<http://www.osce.org/sim/>> [9.8.2004]
- . (2004g) OSCE Spillover Monitor Mission to Skopje. [online] available from <<http://www.osce.org/skopje/>> [9.8.2004]

- . (n.d.) The OSCE Missions of Long Duration in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina. [online] available from <<http://www.osce.org/publications/survey/survey26.htm>> [9.8.2004]
- OSCE and ODIHR (2000) OSCE/ODIHR Observers issue preliminary statement on municipal elections in Montenegro. 12 June (press release)
- Oschlies, Wolf (1997) 'Duldung' ist ein (neu)bosnisches Wort. Der Krieg in Bosnien-Herzegovina. Das Dayton-Friedensabkommen. Die bosnischen Kriegsfluechtlinge. St. Augustin Verlag S. Becher, 1997
- . (1999) Der Vierfrontenkrieg des Slobodan Milosevic. Bundesrepublik Jugoslawien vor dem Zerfall. Bericht des BIOst No 18
- OESFK, Schweizerische Friedensstiftung in cooperation with AFK (1997) 'Die Zukunft Suedosteuropas. Friedensbericht 1997. Theorie und Praxis ziviler Konfliktbearbeitung. Ergebnisse der internationalen State-of-Peace Konferenz 1996.' DIALOG, Beitraege zur Friedensforschung vol 32, Heft 1-2, Verlag Rueegger
- Oesterreichische Friedensdienste (2000) Report Austrian Peace Services (OEFD). December
- . (n.d.) Plattform zur Foerderung der Friedensarbeit. (flyer)
- Otim, Benny Ben (1996) 'Caught in the Crossfire: Dilemmas of Human Rights Protection in Former Yugoslavia'. In Volunteers Against Conflict. United Nations Volunteers. ed. by United Nations. Tokyo:United Nations University Press 1996:117-135
- Ott, Ursula (1992) 'Krieg gegen Frauen'. Emma, September 1992. [online] available from <<http://www.emma.de/553.htm>> [4.6.2008]
- Otto, Klaus-Stephan and Willmutz, Stefan (2000), 'Das OSZE-Projekt. Erfahrungen des Zivilen Friedensdienstes mit einer Ausbildung in der Republik Bosnien und Herzegowina'. Ziviler Friedensdienst. Fachleute fuer den Frieden. Idee – Erfahrungen – Ziele. ed. by Evers, Tilman. Opladen: Leske + Budrich: 300-308
- 'Over A Million Bosnians Back Home' (2004) BBC News. 21 September. [online] available from <<http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/europe/3675968.stm>> [24.6.2008]
- Overy, Bob (1982) How Effective are Peace Movements? Montreal: Harvest House
- Owen, David (1995) Balkan Odyssey. New York:Harcourt Brace & Co
- Pacedifesa (2004) Foglio Informativo del Centro Studi Difesa Civile, Anno II, n.5, 6 guigno (flyer)
- Paes, Wolf-Christian and Schlotter, Peter (2002) 'EU in heikler Mission – Mazedonien zwischen Krieg und europaeischer Zukunft.' In Friedensgutachten 2002. ed. by Hessische Stiftung Friedens –und Konfliktforschung, BICC, INEF, FEST und IFSH. Muenster:Lit: 235-244
- Paffenholz, Thania (1993) 'Die Waffen nieder!' Konzepte und Wege der Kriegsbeendigung.' In Frieden durch Einmischung? Der Schrecken des Krieges und die (Ohn)Macht der internationalen Gemeinschaft. ed. by Matthies, Volker. Bonn:Dietz: 57-68
- . (2001a) 'Western Approaches to Negotiation and Mediation: An Overview. 'In Peace-building. A Field Guide. ed. by Reychler, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania. London/Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers 2001:75-81
- . (2001b) 'Ansaetze ziviler Konfliktbearbeitung.' In Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung. Eine internationale Herausforderung. Schriftenreihe des OESFK-Studien fuer europaeische Friedenspolitik vol 8. ed. by Mader, Gerald, Eberwein, Wolf-Dieter and Vogt, Wolfgang R. Muenster:agenda Verlag:15-26
- . (2001c) 'Thirteen Characteristics of Successful Mediation in Mozambique'. In: Peace-building. A Field Guide. ed. by Reychler, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania. London/Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 121-127

- . (2004) 'Designing Intervention Processes: Conditions and Parameters for Conflict Transformation.' In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- . (2008) 'Zivilgesellschaft und Friedensfoerderung'. FriEnt Impulse 4/2008. [online] available from <http://www.frient.de> [14.11.2008]
- Paffenholz, Thania and Reychler, Luc (2007) Aid for Peace. A Guide to Planning and Evaluation for Conflict Zones. Baden-Baden: Nomos
- Paffenholz, Thania (2009a) Summary of Results for a Comparative Research Project: Civil Society and Peacebuilding. CCDP Working Paper. The Graduate Institute / The Centre on Conflict, Development and Peacebuilding Geneva ^{*(FK/PC)}
- Paffenholz, Thania (2009b) Civil Society and Peacebuilding: A Critical Assessment. Boulder: Lynne Rienner Publishers (forthcoming)
- Paffenholz, Thania and Spurk, Christoph (2006) Civil Society, Civic Engagement, and Peacebuilding. Social Development Paper 36, October. Hrsg. Worldbank. [online] available from <http://siteresources.worldbank.org/INTCPR/Resources/WP36_web.pdf> [15.10.2008]
- Pajic, Zoran (1992) 'The Political Aims of Intervention'. ex-Yugofax No 12, 29 June, 1
- Palokaj, Augustin (2004) 'Eu Warns Serbia Over Government Delay'. Balkan Crisis Report No 478, 29. January
- Palokaj, Augustin (2004) 'New Formula For Stalled Integration Process', Balkan Crisis Report No 516, 17. September
- Panic, Teofil (1996) 'Mortal Friends'. Warreport No 45, September, 12-13
- Papic, Zarko (2001) 'The SEE Region and Stability Pact'. In International Support Policies to SEE Countries – Lessons (not) learned in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Sarajevo, August. ed. by Fond Otvoreno Drustvo Bosne I Hercegovine: 25-30. [online] available from <http://www.soros.org.ba/en/dokumenti/ostali/book/> [8.11.2003]
- Papini, Massimo (1995) 'Un tentativo di analisi valutazione di MIR SADA' in: Per un modello di difesa nonviolento. Che cosa ci insegna il conflitto nella Ex-Jugoslavia? Atti del IV Convegno Nazionale di Ricerca sulla Difesa Popolare Nonviolenta, Vicenza 6-7 novembre 1993. ed. by Drago, Antonino and Soccio, Matteo. Venezia: Editoria Universitaria: 67-71
- Para Pacem (1992) 'Para Pacem', 2woechentlicher Informationsdienst. Zuerich, 28. September. (letter)
- Para Pacem (1996). 'Meinungen, Informationen und Hintergruende zu Krieg und Frieden auf dem Gebiet Ex-Jugoslawiens'. Nr 3
- Paris, Roland (2002) 'International Peacebuilding and the 'Mission Civilisatrice''. Review of International Studies Vol 28, 637-656. [online] available from <http://sobek.colorado.edu/~parisr/RIS_Oct_2002.pdf> [5.4.2003]
- Parliamentary Task Group of the 'Friends of the Balkans & Kosovo (1998) Preliminary Announcement (2), Dialogue on Kosovo. Diest/Brussels, 6-12 December 1998.
- Parnreiter, Joerg (2000) 'Erstens kommt es anders...'. Friedensdienst 4, 14
- Partos, Gabriel (2001) 'Perceptions in the Former Yugoslav Republics.' In Kosovo. Perceptions of War and its Aftermath. ed by Buckley, Mary and Cummings, Sally N. London: continuum: 46-60
- Partos, Gabriel (2005) The Balkan Refugee Crisis Eases. [online] available from <<http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/europe/4360555.stm>> [25.6.2008]

- Passy, Florence (2001) 'Political Altruism and the Solidarity Movement: An Introduction.' In Political Altruism? Solidarity Movements in International Perspective. ed. by Guigni, Marco and Passy, Florence. Lanham: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers: 3-25
- Paulsen, Oystein (1999) 'Canadian surgeons work in local hospital', First published in SFOR Informer #74 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/sfor-at-work/surgeons/t991119a.htm> [14.10.2002]
- Paulson, Joshua (2005) 'Removing the Dictator in Serbia – 1996-2000.' In Waging Nonviolent Struggle. 20th Century Practice and 21st Century Potential. By Sharp, Gene. Boston: Porter Sargent Publishers 2005:315-339
- Pavlovic, Dusan (2004) 'Comment: Serbia Can Survive Without US Aid'. Balkan Crisis Report No 481, 20. February
- Pavlovic, Filip and de Vrieze, Franklin (2002) 'Federal Republic of Yugoslavia: A State in Search of Its Future.' In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette. Boulder: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 283-288
- Pax Christi (1994) 'Aktivitaeten und Kontakte von Pax Christi International im ehemaligen Jugoslawien.' In Friedens- statt Militaereinsaetze. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im Aufwind. ed. by Pax Christi. Probleme des Friedens 2-3, Idstein: Komzi Verlag: 98-104
- . (2003) Begegnungs- und Versoehnungsarbeit in Banja Luka, Friedensdienste. Banja Luka. [online] available from <www.paxchristi.de/frieden/banjaluka/content.html> [27.5.2003]
- . (n.d.) Friedensdienste. Zenica. [online] available from <www.paxchristi.de/frieden/zenica/content.html> [27.5.2003]
- . (ed.) (1994) Bosnien-Herzegowina. Die Chancen einer gerechten Loesung. Politische Vierteljahresschrift. Bad Vilbel: Komzi Verlag
- . (ed.) (1994) Friedens- statt Militaereinsaetze. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im Aufwind. Probleme des Friedens 2-3/1994. Idstein: Komzi Verlag
- . (ed.) (1996) Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. Idstein: Komzi-Verlag
- Pax Christi and Forum Ziviler Friedensdienst (n.d.) Abschlußbericht ueber das ZFD-Projekt in Zenica /Bosnien. Maerz 2000 – Juni 2003. [online] available from >http://paxchristi.de/fix/files/doc/Schlu%DFbericht_Zenica_ZFD.pdf>
- Pax Christi Flanders in Belgium, Pax Christi The Netherlands and Forum Civil Peace Service (2000) Kosovo & Northern Ireland. Two European Regions Getting Into Dialogue. Report from the Seminar in Skopje, December 16-20, 2000. (paper)
- Pax Christi International (1996a) Newsletter No. 36, January
- . (1996b) Newsletter No. 39, July
- . (1996c) Newsletter No. 40, September
- Pax Christi Nederland (ed.) (1995) 6 edn. Oorlog in voormalig Joegoslavie. Een tragedie zonder eind? De kleine dingen die we kunnen doen. Utrecht
- PDS im Bundestag (1999) Nachrichten gegen den Krieg (3). Wolfgang Gehrcke, Fax from 4.May. (press release)
- Peace Brigades International (1993) Final Report PBI Exploratory Team to Croatia. January (paper)
- Peace Institute Ljubljana (1992) Project: Demilitarization of the Island Vis, Ljubljana, Jan. 28th 1992. (paper)

- Peace Island Vis (1992) VIS. European Project of Demilitarisation. Report on the international Peace Conference: Vis – Peace Island (3-5 April 1992), Ljubljana, Mai 5 (paper)
- Peace News (1993) PN Educational Offprints 1. London:Peace News
- Peace Pledge Union, (n.d.) Steps to Peace in Bosnia. (folder with materials)
- Peace Research Center (1993) Proposal for a Study and Conference Concerning the Humanitarian Situation of the Civilian Population in Former Yugoslavia. Nijmegen (proposal paper)
- Peaceworkers (1998) Email with letter by Bujar Dugolli, president of UPSUP, 3.8.1998 (e-mail)
- Pecanin, Senad (1993) 'The Bosnians' Choice: End the War, Save the State – or Neither'. Balkan War Report No 21, August/September,:5
- . (1995) 'Climb Any Mountain?'. Balkan War Report No 32, March, 12
- . (1997) 'Planning for Partition. Bosniak nationalist leaders are giving up on Dayton'. Warreport No 51, May, 6
- . (2002) 'Comment: Strebrenica Report 'Lets West Off the Hook''. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 331, 18. April
- Pejic, Jelena (1994) 'The No-Win Sanctions. UN sanctions against Yugoslavia have been largely counter-productive'. Balkan War Report No 28, September, 21-22
- Perry, Valery (2002a) ECMI Civil Society Project in Bosnia and Herzegovina: The Role of Annex 8 in Bridging Communities, Promoting Reconciliation, and Developing a Unique Identity in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Law Centre, Sarajevo University, 15 December 2001. ECMI Report #25, [online] available from <www.ecmi.de/doc/download/report_25.pdf> [25.6.2003]
- . (2002b) ECMI Civil Society Project in Bosnia and Herzegovina: Annex 8 of the General Framework Agreement for Peace and the Role of the Preservation of National Monuments in Successful Peace Implementation, Workshop 2: Implementation, Professionalism and Community Involvement, Banja Luka, 12 April 2002. ECMI Report #29, July 2002 [online] available from <www.ecmi.de/doc/download/report_29.pdf> [25.6.2003]
- . (2002c) ECMI Civil Society Project in Bosnia and Herzegovina: Ensuring Effective Implementation of Annex 8 Through the Recommendations and Proposed Activities of Experts and Civil Society Representatives. Final workshop of Preliminary Project Phase Mostar, Bosnia and Herzegovina, 21 June 2002. ECMI Report #32. [online] available from <www.ecmi.de/doc/download/report_32.pdf> [25.6.2003]
- . (2002d) ECMI Civil Society Project in Bosnia and Herzegovina: Ensuring Effective Implementation of Annex 8 Through the Establishment of a Cultural Heritage Association, Implementation Workshop 1, Sarajevo, 4 October 2002. ECMI Report #36 [online] available from <www.ecmi.de/doc/download/report_36.pdf>[25.6.2003]
- Petritsch, Wolfgang (2000) Bosnien und Herzegowina im 5. Jahr nach Dayton -Ein Land mit europaeischer Zukunft?, Vortrag des Hohen Repraesentanten fuer Bosnien und Herzegowina, vor der Deutschen Gesellschaft fuer Auswaertige Politik Berlin, Dienstag, 16. Mai 2000. [online] available from <<http://www.dgap.org/texte/petritsch160500.htm>> [18.6.2003]
- Petritsch, Wolfgang, Kaser, Karl and Pichler, Robert (1999) Kosovo Kosova. Mythen, Daten, Fakten. Klagenfurt u.a.:Wieser- Verlag
- Petruseva, Ana (2001) 'Preparing for Deployment'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report, No 273, 22. August

- . (2002) 'Macedonia: New Law Clears Way for Aid'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 313, 31. January
- . (2004a) 'Comment: Macedonians Turn Away From Ethnic Divisions.' Balkan Crisis Report No 525
- . (2004b) 'Fury Over Decentralisation Forces Poll Delay'. Balkan Crisis Report No 510, 5. August
- Petruseva, Ana and Georgievski, Boris (2004) 'Macedonia Faces Fresh Turmoil as PM Quits'. Balkan Crisis Report No 528, 20. November
- Peuraca, Branka (1999) 'Mladi Mladima: Youth-to-Youth Project'. In Three Dimensions of Peacebuilding in Bosnia. Findings from USIP-Sponsored Research and Field Projects. Peaceworks 32. ed. by Riskin, Steven M. December. [online] available from <www.uip.org/pubs/peaceworks/pwks32.pdf> [25.6.2003], 43-47
- Pezer, Julija (2002) 'Fluechtlingshilfe und -rueckkehr'. In Deutsche Konfliktbewaeltigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 235-249
- Philipps-Heck, Ulla (1991) Lernziel: Entfeindung. Die Friedensschule von Neve Shalom/Wahat al-Salam in Israel. Frankfurt a. Main: Haat und Herchen
- Phinnemore, David and Siani-Davies, Peter (2003) 'Beyond Intervention? The Balkans, the Stability Pact and the European Union.' In International Intervention in the Balkans since 1995, ed. by Siani-Davies, Peter. London/New York: Routledge: 172-193
- 'Picture Perfect! $32,000 raised for Kosova'. (1994) Illyria No 336, 29.9.-1.10., 7
- Pierce, Philip (1996) UNOV Social Reconstruction Project, Gornji Vakuf, Central Bosnia. March. (paper)
- Pierce, Philip and Stubbs, Paul (2000) 'Peacebuilding, Hegemony and Integrated Social Development: The UNDP in Travnik'. In Regeneration of War-Torn Societies. Ed. by Pugh, Michael. Houndsmill/New York: Macmillan Press/St. Martin's Press: 157-176
- Pilar, Ivo (1995) Eine Geschichte Kroatiens, Serbiens und Bosniens. Bearbeitet von Michael Ackermann. Heiligenhofer Studien zu Volkstumsfragen vol 3. Heiligenhof-Bad Kissingen
- Pina, Juan A. (2000) 'SFOR children aid', First published in SFOR Informer #82, March 1. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/humanitarian/child/t000301.htm> [16.10.2002]
- Pinter, Harold (1999) Nato Bombing of Serbia and the war in Kosovo. National Demonstration against the War, London June 5 1999. [online] available from <http://www.haroldpinter.org/politics/politics_serbia.shtml> [13.6.2008]
- Pirane, Pietro and Zucconi, Mario (2001) 'Poor Enforcement of Sanctions: Lack of Political Determination?' In The Effects of Economic Sanctions: the case of Serbia. ed. by Mario Zucconi, Milano: 43-62
- 'Politiker eiern' (2001) die tageszeitung 28. July: 2
- Pollet-Kammerlander, Doris (1993) 'Internationale Konferenz ueber Minderheiten in Serbien und Kroatien.' Alpe-Adria Alternativ 4-5.
- Polzer, Miroslav (2000) 'Regionale wirtschaftliche Kooperation im ex-jugoslawischen Raum im Kontext der europaeischen Integration.' In Europaeisierung versus Nationalismus. Der ex-jugoslawische Raum auf der Suche nach Stabilitaet. ed. by Kumer, Anton, Polzer, Miroslav and Skuhra, Anselm. Frankfurt/Main: Peter Lang: 123-151
- Poncet, Bernard (2001) 'Croatia: Status Report.' In The Operational Role of the OSCE in South-Eastern Europe. Contributing to regional stability in the Balkans. Ed. by Ghebali, Victor-Ives and Warner, Daniel. Aldershot: Ashgate: 11-19

- Popovic, Srdja (2001) An Analytical Overview of the Application of Gene Sharp's Theory of Nonviolent Action in Milosevic's Serbia. Centre for Applied NonViolent Action & Strategies. [online] available from http://www.canvasopedia.org/files/serbian/CTI_Serbian_Political_Substance.doc [16.7.2008]
- Popovic, Tanja (2004) 'Bosnien-Herzegowina in Bewegung'. Medienhilfe Info 1.
- Popovski, Vesselin (2003) 'The Concept of Humanitarian Intervention.' In International Intervention in the Balkans since 1995, ed. by Siani-Davies, Peter. London/New York: Routledge:42-58
- Posen, Barry R. (1993) 'The Security Dilemma and Ethnic Conflict.' Survival 35, No 1, 27-47
- Poucher Harbin, Julie (2002a) 'Bosnia: Sex Trade Claims Spread'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 360, 21. August
- . (2002b) 'Bosnia: UN Handover Causes Concern'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 393 (part 1), 23. December
- Pradetto, August (1998) Konfliktmanagement durch militaerische Intervention? Dilemmata westlicher Kosovo-Politik. Studien zur internationalen Politik Hamburg: Institut fuer Internationale Politik an der Universitaet der Bundeswehr Hamburg
- Preis, Robert (1999) 'Projekt mit Fortsetzung'. Friedensdienst 4, 7
- Prendergast, John and Plumb, Emily (2002) 'Building Local Capacity: From Implementation to Peacebuilding.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elizabeth M. Boulder ad London: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 327-349
- Prienda, Antonio (2003) 'Bosnia Plans New Model Army'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 430, 17. May
- Progoniski, Drazen (1994) 'They Never Asked the Bosnians. Were there other options? Of course, but no one wanted to hear'. Balkan War Report No 28, September, 18
- Programmhinweis 'Stoppt den Krieg! Helfen statt bomben! Großdemonstration am 8. Mai 1999 auf dem Gendarmenmarkt'* (1999) (flyer)
- Prsa, Maria (2002) 'Die OSZE-Mission in Bosnien und Herzegowina'. In OSZE-Jahrbuch 2002. ed. by Institut fuer Friedensforschung und Sicherheitspolitik an der Universitaet Hamburg. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft :169-185
- Prutsalis, Mark (2002) 'Too Little, Too Late.' In With no Peace to Keep. United Nations Peacekeeping and the Wars in Former Yugoslavia. ed. by Stamkoski, George. 2nd edn. London: Volatile Media: 188-201
- Pucer, Edi (1995) 'Hardly a Few Houses'. Balkan War Report No 30, December 1994/January 1995, 27-28
- Pucer, Edi (1995) 'Snow White on the Threshold. Italy and Slovenia finally have a chance to move forward'. Balkan War Report No 32, March, 9
- Pucher, Wolfgang (2001) 'Glueck, Schweiß und Traeume'. Friedensdienst 4, 25-26
- Pugh, Michael (1998) 'Post-conflict Rehabilitation: Social and Civil Dimensions.' The Journal of Humanitarian Assistance 1998 [online] available from www.jha.ac/articles/a034.htm [11.11.2003]
- . (2000) Protectorates and Spoils of Peace. Interestic Manipulations of Political Economy in South-East Europe. Copenhagen: COPRI. [online] available from www.copri.dk/publications/WP/WP%202000/36-2000.doc [24.6.2003]
- . (ed.) (2000) Regeneration of War-Torn Societies. Houndsmill/New York: Macmillan Press/St. Martin's Press

- Puehs, Wolfgang, Weggel, Thomas and Richter, Claus (eds.) (1994) Sicherheitspolitisches Symposium Balkankonflikt. Instrumente des Internationalen Krisenmanagements. Vom 25. bis 27. Juni 1993 an der Universitaet Bayreuth. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft
- Pula, Besnik (2003) 'The UN in Kosova: Administering Democratization?' In Understanding the War in Kosovo. ed. by Bieber, Florian and Daskalovski, Zidas London/Portland: Frank Cass Publishers: 199-216
- Pupavac, Vanessa (2003) 'Securing the Community? An Examination of International Psychosocial Intervention.' In International Intervention in the Balkans since 1995, ed. by Siani-Davies, Peter. London/New York: Routledge: 158-171
- Putevi Mira (n.d.) Der Verein 'Friedenswege' Bosanska /Kozarska Dubica (Bosnien) (flyer, received 2003)
- Putnam, Tonya L. (2002) 'Human Rights and Sustainable Peace.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elizabeth M. Boulder ad London: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 237-271
- Putnikovic, Jelica (2004) 'Serbia: Sugar Industry Hopes Turn Sour'. Balkan Crisis Report No 480, 13. February
- Qirezi, Arben (2003) 'UN Under Pressure to Cede More Powers'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 405, 10. February
- . (2004) 'Old Foes Unite to Form New Kosovo Government'. Balkan Crisis Report No 528, 20. November
- Quero, Filipe (1997) 'SFOR calls Full House', First published in SFOR Informer #23, November 12, 1997 [online] available from < www.nato.int/sfor/sfor-at-work/op-fullhouse/opfull.htm > [14.10.2002]
- Quitt, Sabrina (2001) 'Eindruecke aus einem Jahr Friedensdienst'. Friedensdienst 4, 17-18
- Radan, Peter (2002) The Break-up of Yugoslavia and International Law. London/New York: Routledge
- Radio Zid (1994) 'The Washington Agreement. Interview with Dr. Ivo Komsic.' hCa quarterly No 10, Summer, 4-5
- Radulovic, Zoran (2001) 'Montenegro on Brink of Financial Ruin'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report, No 284, 28. September
- Ramet, Sabrina P. (2001) 'The Kingdom of God or the Kingdom of Ends: Kosovo in Serbian Perception.' In Kosovo. Perceptions of War and its Aftermath. ed by Buckley, Mary and Cummings, Sally N. London: continuum: 30-45
- Ramsbotham, Oliver and Woodhouse, Tom (1999) Encyclopedia of International Peacekeeping Operations. Santa Barbara: ABC-CLIO
- Rappold, Erich and Schmidtberger, Adam (1997) 'Die Lage im 'wilden Osten'. Politische Entwicklung im Gebiet der UNTAES-Zone/Ostslawonien'. Friedensdienst 6, 12
- Rastello, Luca (1998) La guerra in casa. Venezia: Einaudi
- Rathfelder, Erich (1998) Sarajevo und danach. Sechs Jahre Reporter im ehemaligen Jugoslawien. Muenchen: Beck
- Rebellen besetzen makedonische Orte' (2001) die tageszeitung 2. July: 2
- Rebuilding Bosnia* (2002) 'Help for Self-Help' and Rebuilding the Infrastructure [online] available from <www.thw.de> [23.12.2002]
- Refalo, Alain (1999) 'Une position contestée. Les Verts francais et la guerre au Kosovo.' Non-Violence Actualité No 236, June, 12

- Refugees International (2003) Report on 'The Power to Protect'. Using New Military Capabilities to Stop Mass Killings, by Bernath, Clifford H. and Gompert, David C. [online] available from <www.refugeesinternational.org> [15.6.2006]
- Reimann, Cordula (2001) 'Towards Conflict Transformation: Assessing the State-of-the-Art in Conflict Management - Reflections from a Theoretical Perspective.' In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- Rein, Oliver (1997) 'Normalisierungsrock'n'roll? Ueber Moeglichkeit und Unmoeglichkeit von Friedensdienst in Mostar'. Friedensdienst 6, 17-20
- Reinhardt, Klaus (2001) 'Lehren aus Kosovo. Militaerische und politische Herausforderungen'. Internationale Politik 3, 32-36
- Reinhardt, Klaus (2002) 2nd edn. KFOR. Streitraefte fuer den Frieden. Tagebuchaufzeichnungen als deutscher Kommandeur im Kosovo. Frankfurt a.Main: Verlag der Universitaetsbuchhandlung Blazek und Bergmann seit 1891
- Reiter, Erich and Selten, Reinhard (2003) 'Zeittafel.' In Zur Loesung des Kosovo-Konfliktes. Die Anwendung der Szenariobuendelanalyse im Konfliktmanagement. ed. by Reiter, Erich and Selten, Reinhard. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 146-151
- . (eds.) (2003) Zur Loesung des Kosovo-Konfliktes. Die Anwendung der Szenariobuendelanalyse im Konfliktmanagement. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft
- Reiter, Guenther (2000) 'Das Projekt 'Peace Teams'. Hinaus in die Doerfer'. Friedensdienst 3, 5-6
- Remacle, Eric (2001) 'The Co-operation between International Organisations in the Management of the Third Yugoslav War.' In The Operational Role of the OSCE in South-Eastern Europe. Contributing to regional stability in the Balkans. ed. by Ghebali, Victor-Ives and Warner, Daniel. Aldershot:Ashgate:69-76
- Repetschnigg, Werner (1999) 'Ueber die Zivilgesellschaft in einem uniformierten Land'. Friedensdienst 4, 5-6
- 'Resolution der TeilnehmerInnen des 4. Kultur- und Friedensdialoges Graz-Sarajevo ueber die Errichtung eines 'Koordinationsbueros fuer gemeinsame Kultur- und Friedensarbeit' in Sarajevo.' Graz, 9.-10. Dezember 1997. FriedensDienst 6, 34-35
- Reuter, Jens (1993) 'Jugoslawien: Versagen der internationalen Gemeinschaft?' In Frieden durch Einmischung? Der Schrecken des Krieges und die (Ohn)Macht der internationalen Gemeinschaft. ed. by Matthies, Volker. Bonn:Dietz: 171-183
- Reychler, Luc (1999) Democratic Peace-building and Conflict Prevention. The Devil is in the Transition. Leuven:Leuven University Press
- Reychler, Luc (2001) 'Conceptual Framework.' In Peace-building. A Field Guide. ed. by Reychler, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania. London/Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers:3- 15
- Reychler, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania (eds.) (2001) Peace-building. A Field Guide. London/Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers
- Rhodes, Aaron (2007) Ten Years of Media Support to the Balkans. An Assessment, Published under the auspices of Yasha Lange on behalf of the Media Task Force of the Stability Pact for South Eastern Europe. Amsterdam:EU
- Richmond, Oliver P. (2003) 'Introduction: NGOs, Peace and Human Security. In Mitigating Conflict. The Role of NGOs.' International Peacekeeping: A Frank Cass Journal Vol 10, No 1, spring: ed. by Carey, Henry F.and Richmond, Oliver, 1- 11

- Richter-Lyonette, Elenor (1997) 'Frauen als Zeuginnen des Internationalen Kriegsverbrechertribunals.' In Die Zukunft Suedosteuropas. Friedensbericht 1997. Theorie und Praxis ziviler Konfliktbearbeitung. Ergebnisse der internationalen State-of-Peace Konferenz 1996. ed. by OESFK, Schweizerische Friedensstiftung in cooperation with AFK (1997) DIALOG, Beitrage zur Friedensforschung Band 32, Heft 1-2 Verlag Rueegger:103-117
- Ridgway, Andrew (1998) 'Developing the Peace in Central Bosnia – 1994. The Role of the Joint Commission'. In UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations in a Civil War-like Conflict. ed. by Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin. Hants/Brookfield:Ashgate::218-237
- Rieche, Bernd (2006) '1x1 der zivilen, gewaltfreien Konfliktbearbeitung.' In Zivil statt militaerisch- Erfahrungen mit ziviler, gewaltfreier Konfliktbearbeitung im Ausland. ed. by AGDF, Bonn: 14-21
- Riedel, Sabine (1999) 'Ein Stabilitaetspakt fuer Suedosteuropa?' In Der Kosovo-Krieg. Fakten, Hintergruende, Alternativen. ed. by Albrecht,Ulrich and Schaefer, Paul Koeln:Papyrossa Verlag:174-188
- Riedel, Sabine and Kalman, Michael (1999) 'Die Destabilisierung Suedosteuropas durch den Jugoslawienkrieg.' Suedosteuropa, 48. Jg, 5-6, 258-315
- . (2000a) 'Soziale Frage und Gewaltpraevention in Suedosteuropa.' Oesterreichische Osthefte Jahrgang 42, Heft 2, 143-172
- . (2000b) 'Conflict and Social Issues in South-East Europe.' South-East Europe Review 2, 51-64
- Riegler, Henriette (1999) Einmal Dayton und zurueck. Pespektiven einer Nachkriegsordnung im ehemaligen Jugoslawien. Wien:Braumuller
- Rigby, Andrew (1994) 'Unofficial' Third Party Nonviolent Intervention in the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict: An Overview. (paper)
- . (2002) 'Three Contrasting Approaches for 'Dealing With the Past': Collective Amnesia, Retributive Justice and Prioritising Truth, Committee for Conflict Transformation Support.' CCTS Newsletter 18, Autumn 2002 [online] available from <<http://www.c-r.org/ccts/ccts18/3apprch.htm>> [4.3.2003]
- Rill, Helena, Smidling, Tamara and Bitoljanu, Ana (eds.) (2007) 20 Pieces of Encouragement for Awakening and Change. Peacebuilding in the Region of the Former Yugoslavia. Belgrade/Sarajevo:Centre for Nonviolent Action
- 'Ringten um Friedensplan' (2001) die tageszeitung 30.July:2
- Ripley, Tim (1999) Operation Deliberate Force. The UN and NATO Campaign in Bosnia 1995. Lancaster: CDISS
- Riskin, Steven M. (1999) 'Appendix: Bosnian and Balkans-Related Projects Funded by the Institute's Grant Program, 1996-1999.' In Three Dimensions of Peacebuilding in Bosnia. Findings from USIP-Sponsored Research and Field Projects. ed. by Riskin, Steven M. December [online] available from <www.uip.org/pubs/peaceworks/pwks32.pdf> [25.6.2003]:48-52
- . (ed.) (1999) Three Dimensions of Peacebuilding in Bosnia. Findings from USIP-Sponsored Research and Field Projects. Peaceworks 32. December. [online] available from <www.uip.org/pubs/peaceworks/pwks32.pdf> [25.6.2003]
- Rittberger, Volker and Fischer, Martina (eds.) (2008) Strategies for Peace. Contributions of International Organizations, States and Non-State Actors. Opladen & Farmington Hills:Barbara Budrich Publishers

- Robertson (2001) 'NATO Mission in Macedonia will not be Pro-Albanian nor Pro-Macedonian.' Translation of the interview by NATO Secretary General Lord Robertson given to Fakti (Macedonian/Albanian language daily), published on Friday 29 June', NATO News Articles, Fakti, Friday, 29 June
- Robinson, P. (2000) 'Research Note: The News Media and Intervention. Triggering the Use of Air Power During Humanitarian Crises.' European Journal of Communication, 15 (3), 405-414
- . (2001) 'The policy-media interaction model: measuring media power during humanitarian crisis.' Journal of Peace Research, 37 (5), 613-633
- Roche, Chris (1999) Impact Assessment for Development Agencies. Oxford:Oxfam
- Roggemann, Herwig (1993) Krieg und Frieden auf dem Balkan. Historische Kriegsursachen. Wirtschaftliche und soziale Kriegsfolgen. Politische und rechtliche Friedensvoraussetzungen. Berlin:Berlin Verlag
- Rogier, Emeric (2001) 'The Operational Role of the OSCE in the Field of Conflict Prevention: An Assessment of the Spillover Monitor Mission to Skopje (Macedonia).' In The Operational Role of the OSCE in South-Eastern Europe. Contributing to regional stability in the Balkans. Ed. by Ghebali, Victor-Ives and Warner, Daniel. Aldershot:Ashgate:47-51
- Rohde, David (1997) A Save Area. Srebrenica: Europe's Worst massacre Since the Second World War. London: Simon & Schuster
- Rohder, Felicitas (1993) 'Ein Jahr Invasion Serbiens'. pogrom 171, June/July :70
- Rohloff, Christoph (ed.) (1999) Krieg im Kosovo- was nun? INEF Report Heft 38/1999, Duisburg:INEF
- Romcevic, Marko (2003) 'Serbia: Cash Crisis Shuts Soup Kitchens'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 438, 17. June
- Røn, Karin Trandheim (2000) 'Thank you God! Thank you Norway!' Norwegian Newspapers and the Kosovo War.' In Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. ed. by Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. London: Pluto Press : 164-169
- Ronnefeldt, Clemens (1996) 'Engagement des internationalen Versöhnungsbundes im Balkan-Krieg'. In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:169-174
- . (2001a) Die Neue NATO, Irak und Jugoslawien. Minden: Internationaler Versöhnungsbund – Deutscher Zweig
- . (2001b) Krieg in Mazedonien / Brief an MdB. 3 July. (e-mail)
- . (2004) 'Krieg ist keine Loesung – Alternativen sind moeglich'. 20 March. (paper)
- Ropers, Norbert (1995) Friedliche Einmischung. Strukturen, Prozesse und Strategien zur konstruktiven Bearbeitung ethnopolitischer Konflikte. Berghof Report 1, Berlin:Berghof
- . (1996) 'Rollen und Funktionen Dritter Parteien bei der konstruktiven Bearbeitung ethnopolitischer Konflikte.' Die Friedenswarte Bd. 71, H. 4, 417-441
- . (2002) 'Civil-Society Peace Constituencies. NGO Involvement in Conflict Resolution – Areas of Activity and Lessons Learned.' In Promoting Peace. The Role of Civilian Conflict Resolution. ed. by Baechler, Guenther. Berne:Staempfli Publishers: 97-126
- . (2004) 'From Resolution to Transformation: Assessing the Role and Impact of Dialogue Projects.' In Facing Ethnic Conflicts. Towards a New Realism. ed. by Wimmer, Andreas, Goldstone, Richard J., Horowitz, Donald L., Joras, Ulrike and Schetter, Conrad. Lanham et al: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers: 174-188
- Ropers, Norbert and Debiel, Tobias (ed.) (1995) Friedliche Konfliktbearbeitung in der Staaten- und Gesellschaftswelt. Bonn: Stiftung Entwicklung und Frieden

- Rosandic, Ruzica (2000) 'Grappling with Peace Education in Serbia.' Peaceworks 33, United States Institute for Peace
- Rose, General Sir Michael (1998) Fighting for Peace. Bosnia 1994. London: The Harvill Press
- Rose, Michael (1998) 'Military Aspects of Peacekeeping: Lessons Learned from Bosnia, from a Commander's Perspective'. In UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations in a Civil War-like Conflict. ed. by Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin. Hants/Brookfield: Ashgate: 153-167
- Rosenblum, Mort and Knight, Gary (2006) Rebuild: Kosovo six years later. Millbrook, NY: De.MO
- Ross, Marc Howard and Rothman, Jay (1999) 'Issues of Theory and Practice in Ethnic Conflict Management.' In Theory and Practice in Ethnic Conflict Management. Theorizing Success and Failure. ed. by Ross, Marc Howard and Rothman, Jay. London/New York: Macmillan Press/St. Martin's Press: 1-23
- . (eds.) (1999) Theory and Practice in Ethnic Conflict Management. Theorizing Success and Failure. London/New York: Macmillan Press/St. Martin's Press
- Roth, Ljubica M. (1994) Peace is possible. E-mail dated 28.April. (E-mail)
- Roth, Roland and Rucht, Dieter (eds.) (1987) Neue soziale Bewegungen in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland. Frankfurt am Main: Campus
- Royal Norwegian Ministry for Foreign Affairs (2001) Reconciliation Among Young People in the Balkans. An Evaluation of the PostPessimist Network and Other Youth Initiatives. Evaluation Report 7. [online] available from <<http://odin.dep.no/ud>> [15.11.2008]
- Rozen, Laura (2000) 'Milosevic Breaks Financial Blockade'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No117, 19.February
- Rubin, Frances (1995) A Basic Guide to Evaluation for Development Workers. Oxford: Oxfam
- . (2002) Blood on the Doorstep: The Politics of Preventive Action. Washington: Brookings Institution
- Rubin, Jeffrey Z., Pruitt, Dean G. and Sung Hee, Kim (1994) Social Conflict. Escalation, Stalemate and Settlement. New York u.a.: McGraw-Hill
- Rucht, Dieter (2003) AnstoeÙe fuer den Wandel – Soziale Bewegungen im 21. Jahrhundert. Vortrag im Rahmen der Gruendungsversammlung fuer 'Die Bewegungsstiftung – AnstoeÙe fuer soziale Bewegungen', [Online] Available: www.wz-berlin.de/zkd/zcm/leute/rucht_downloads.de.htm#downloads [10.4.2008]
- . (2007) 'Engagement in sozialen Bewegungen. Voraussetzungen, Formen, Wirkungen.' In Damit sich was bewegt. ed. by Kolb, Felix and Bewegungsstiftung. Hamburg: VSA Verlag, pp.13-44
- Rudovic, Nedjeljko (2004) 'Montenegro Backs off Separation Vote'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 497, 14. May
- Ruez, Waldemar (1994) 'Friedensdienst in Fluechtlingslagern in Kroatien'. In Friedens- statt Militaereinsatze. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im Aufwind. ed. by Pax Christi. Probleme des Friedens 2-3. Idstein: Komzi Verlag :73-77
- Rufin, Jean-Christophe (1999) 'Kriegswirtschaft in internen Konflikten.' In OEkonome der Buergerkrieg. ed. by Jean, François and Rufin, Jean-Christophe. Hamburg: Hamburger Edition: 15-46
- Rugova, Ibrahim (1994) La question du Kosovo. Entretiens avec Marie-Francoise Allain et Xavier Galmish. Librairie Arthème Fayard

- Rupesinghe, Kumar (1998) Civil Wars, Civil Peace. An Introduction to Conflict Resolution. London: Pluto Press
- . (ed.) (1995) Conflict Transformation. London/New York: MacMillan Press/St.. Martin's Press
- Ruessmann, Ursula (1999a) 'Als Friedensfachkraft in Sarajewo'. In Friedensfachdienst ist machbar! Profis der zivilen Konfliktbearbeitung im Einsatz. ed. by Arbeitsgemeinschaft Qualifizierung fuer zivile Konfliktbearbeitung/Zivilen Friedensdienst. Bonn: AG Qualifizierung: 5-6
- . (1999b) 'Begleiten, unterstuetzen, vermitteln. Szenen aus dem Tagesgeschaef zwoier Friedensarbeiterinnen'. In Friedensfachdienst ist machbar! Profis der zivilen Konfliktbearbeitung im Einsatz. ed. by Arbeitsgemeinschaft Qualifizierung fuer zivile Konfliktbearbeitung/Zivilen Friedensdienst. Bonn: AG Qualifizierung: 9-11
- . (1999c) 'Sprengstoff pur'. Eine Friedensfachkraft auf vermintem Terrain'. In Friedensfachdienst ist machbar! Profis der zivilen Konfliktbearbeitung im Einsatz. ed. by Arbeitsgemeinschaft Qualifizierung fuer zivile Konfliktbearbeitung/Zivilen Friedensdienst. Bonn: AG Qualifizierung: 7-9
- . (1999d) 'Fuer Frieden, Gewaltfreiheit und Menschenrechte. Drei Friedensfachkraefte mitten in Unfrieden und Gewalt'. In Friedensfachdienst ist machbar! Profis der zivilen Konfliktbearbeitung im Einsatz. ed. by Arbeitsgemeinschaft Qualifizierung fuer zivile Konfliktbearbeitung/Zivilen Friedensdienst. Bonn: AG Qualifizierung: 12-13
- . (1999e) 'Im Wettlauf mit der Zeit – Dialogarbeit im Kosovo'. In Friedensfachdienst ist machbar! Profis der zivilen Konfliktbearbeitung im Einsatz. ed. by Arbeitsgemeinschaft Qualifizierung fuer zivile Konfliktbearbeitung/Zivilen Friedensdienst. Bonn: AG Qualifizierung: 14-15
- Ryan, Stephen (1995) 2nd edn. Ethnic Conflict and International Relations. Aldershot: Dartmouth Publishing Company Ltd
- Sabalic, Ines (2002) 'Monenegro: Brussels U-Turn on New State'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 350, 12. July
- Salihu, Arben, Hajrullahu, Muhamet, Limani, Zana and Xharra, Jeta (2004) 'Kosovo Braced for Autumn of Discontent'. Balkan Crisis Report No 509, 30. July
- Sali-Terzic, Sevima (2001) 'Civil Society'. In International Support Policies to SEE Countries – Lessons (not) learned in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Sarajevo, August. ed. by Fond Otvoreno Drustvo Bosne I Hercegovine, 138-158. [online] available from <<http://www.soros.org.ba/en/dokumenti/ostali/book/>> [8.11.2003]
- Salla, Michael (1995) 'Kosovo, Non-violence and the Break-up of Yugoslavia.' Security Dialogue Vol 26(4), 427-438
- Salzer, Gerhard (2001) 'Programme, Lehrbuecher, Seminare, Simulationen... und was das alles mit Frieden zu tun hat'. Friedensdienst 4, 7-8
- Sampson, Steven (2000) Evaluation of Human Rights Office Tuzla /HROT. For the Danish Centre for Human Rights. February. [online] available from <www.humanrights.dk/upload/application/5ff7719d/bosnienmanus.pdf> [24.6.2003]
- Sander, Katherina (1994) Erste internationale Konferenz fuer Konfliktloesung und Friedensarbeit (paper)
- Sannino, Stefano (2002) 'Die OSZE-Mission in der Bundesrepublik Jugoslawien'. In OSZE-Jahrbuch 2002. ed. by Institut fuer Friedensforschung und Sicherheitspolitik an der Universitaet Hamburg. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 131-143
- Santic, Jelena (1995) 'Pakrac.' Bulletin Voice. Peace and Human Rights No 7, April, 12

- Saponja-Hadzic, Milanka (2003) 'Serbia: New Extraditions Expected'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 418, 28.March
- Saskova, Evridika (2003) 'Balkan Border Issues Tackled'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 433, 1. June
- Saskova, Evridika and Janeva, Jasminka M (2003) 'Macedonia: Ohrid Accord Breakthrough'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 396, 9. January
- 'Saudi 'Humanitarian' Convoy Denied Entrance into Macedonia.' (2002) 1 February. Dnevnik. [online] available from <www.realitymacedonia.org.mk/web/news_page.asp?nid=1396> [23.12.2002]
- Saunders, Harold H. (2001) 'Prenegotiation and Circum-negotiation. Arenas of the Multilevel Peace Process.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 483-496
- Sautter, Robert (2000) Balkan Peace Team Spring Quarterly Report. Spring 2000. [online] available from www.BalkanPeaceTeam.org [2.1.2002]
- Schaefer, Paul (1999) 'Alles paletti?- Eine erste Bilanz.' In Der Kosovo-Krieg. Fakten, Hintergruende, Alternativen. ed. by Albrecht,Ulrich and Schaefer, Paul Koeln:Papyrossa Verlag: 189-225
- Scharf, Michael P. (1997) Balkan Justice. The Story Behind the First International War Crimes Trial Since Nuremberg. Durham: Carolina Academic Press
- Scheffran, Juergen (1999) 'Vom Konflikt zur Katastrophe - Wie die NATO die Gewaltspirale im Kosovo verstaerkte.' In Der Kosovo-Krieg. Fakten, Hintergruende, Alternativen. ed. by Albrecht,Ulrich and Schaefer, Paul Koeln:Papyrossa Verlag:56-68
- Scheherazade Newsletter* (1993) No 5, July
- Schell-Faucon, Stephanie (2001) 'Conflict Transformation Through Educational and Youth Programmes.' In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- Schenker, Harald (2002) 'Die OSZE-Mission in Skopje- Eine sich wandelnde Feldmission in einem sich wandelndem Umfeld'. OSZE-Jahrbuch 2002. (2002) Ed. by Institut fuer Friedensforschung und Sicherheitspolitik an der Universitaet Hamburg. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft:187-207
- Schieder, Thedor (2002) Weltbild Geschichte Europas. 1848-1918. Staatensystem als Vormacht der Welt. Augsburg:Weltbild 2002
- Schiel, Georg (2002) Projekte des zivilen Friedensdienstes: Fluechtlingsrueckfuehrungsprojekt in Zenica/Bosnien. 4. Quartalsbericht – Oktober bis Dezember 2000 – Jahresbericht 2002. 17.December. [online] available from <www.paxchristi.de/frieden/> [29.5.2003]
- Schierup, Carl-Ulrik (1999a) 'The Spectre of Balkanism: Globalisation, Fragmentation and the Enigma of Reconstruction in Post-Communist Society.' In Scramble for the Balkans: Nationalism, Globalism and the Political Economy of Reconstruction. ed. by Schierup, Carl-Ulrik. London:Macmillan Press Ltd: 1-31
- . (1999b) 'Memorandum for Modernity? Socialist Modernisers, Retraditionalisation and the Rise of Ethnic Nationalism.' In Scramble for the Balkans: Nationalism, Globalism and the Political Economy of Reconstruction. ed. by Schierup, Carl-Ulrik. London:Macmillan Press Ltd: 32-61
- . (ed.) (1999) Scramble for the Balkans: Nationalism, Globalism and the Political Economy of Reconstruction. London:Macmillan Press Ltd

- Schirch, Lisa (1995) Keeping the Peace. Exploring Civilian Alternatives in Conflict Prevention. Uppsala:Life and Peace Institute
- Schirch, Lisa (2006) Civilian Peacekeeping. Preventing Violence and Making Space for Democracy. Uppsala: Life & Peace Institute
- Schlotter, Peter (2002) Gewaltpraevention durch Demokratisierung? Mazedonien zwischen Krieg und Frieden. HSFK Standpunkte No 2. Frankfurt a. Main:HSFK
- Schmid, Thomas (ed.) (1999) Krieg im Kosovo. Reinbek b. Hamburg: rowohlt taschenbuch verlag
- Schmidt, Hans-Joachim (1996) Konventionelle Ruestungskontrolle – Instrument zur Stabilisierung des Friedensprozesses im ehemaligen Jugoslawien? HSFK Report 10. Frankfurt a .Main:HSFK
- Schmitz, Achim (1998) Gewaltfreie Interventionen im ehemaligen Jugoslawien durch Organisationen der europaeischen Friedensbewegung. IFGK Arbeitspapier No 9, Wahlenau:IFGK
- Schneckener, Ulrich (2001) 'Die EU als Krisenmanager. Der Testfall Mazedonien.' Internationale Politik 5/2001:43-48
- . (2002) Auswege aus dem Buergerkrieg – Modell zur Regulierung ethno-nationalistischer Konflikte. Frankfurt a.M.: Suhrkamp
- . (2003) 'Bosnien-Herzegowina: Der aufgezwungene Frieden.' In Den Frieden gewinnen. Zur Konsolidierung von Friedensprozessen in Nachkriegsgesellschaften. Ed by Ferdowski, Mir A. and Matthies, Volker. Stiftung Entwicklung und Frieden. Bonn:Dietz:42-69
- . (2004) 'Politiken der Anerkennung. Modelle zur Konfliktregulierung in ethnisch pluralen Gesellschaften.' In Demokratien im Krieg. ed. by Schweitzer, Christine, Aust, Bjoern and Schlotter, Peter. AFK-Friedensschriften Band 31. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft:385-403
- .(2008) 'Addressing fragile statehood: dilemmas and strategies of international statebuilding.' In: Strategies for Peace. Contributions of International Organizations, States and Non-State Actors. Eds. by Rittberger, Volker and Fischer, Martina. Opladen & Farmington Hills:Barbara Budrich Publishers: 193-219
- Schnettler, Johannes, Wiese, Gisela and Koerber, Manfred (1995) 'Wider einen kommentarlosen Pazifismus!' With an editorial introduction. Friedensforum 5, 23-25
- Schoups, Johan (2001) Peacekeeping and Transitional Administration in Eastern Slavonia. In Peace-building. A Field Guide. ed. by Reyhler, Luc and Paffenholz, Thania. London/Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 389-396
- Schuber, Gunter (2002) Der Kosovokrieg und das Projekt des Rechtspazifismus - Eine vorlaeufige Bilanz der Debatte. AFB-Texte Nr. 2 February, Bonn:AFB
- Schultz, Kerstin (1994) Build Peace From the Ground Up. About People and the UN in a War Zone in Croatia. Lund:TFF
- Schulz, Cristina, Schumann, Kerstin, Froehlich, Malte and John, Friedemann (1993) Bericht Serbien-Reise 14.-20.3.93. (paper)
- Schwegmann, Christoph (2003) Die Jugoslawien-Kontaktgruppe in den Internationalen Beziehungen. Baden-Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft
- Schweitzer, Christine (1991) 'Krieg und Frieden in Jugoslawien.' in: Rundbrief. Nr. 3, 1-2.
- . (1992) 'Forum fuer Frieden und Versoehnung im frueheren Jugoslawien.' ZAM-Zeitschrift fuer Antimilitarismus 7, 15-16
- . (1993a) Project Proposal: Nonviolent Intervention in Kosovo: Sending a team of international volunteers. 1.April, sent to BSV and WRI. (letter)

- . (1993b) 'Die Antikriegs- und Friedensbewegung im ehemaligen Jugoslawien: Wegbereiterin einer zivilen Gesellschaft?' in: Jahrbuch Frieden 1994. Konflikte, Abruestung, Friedensarbeit. Muenchen: Beck'sche Verlagsbuchhandlung: 215-224
- . (1993c) Auswertungstreffen: Konfliktloesungs-Trainings im ehemaligen Jugoslawien. 14.-17.Oktober in Budapest. 21 October (report)
- . (1993d) Pakrac- Situation und Projektentwicklung, 8. May (paper)
- . (1994a) 'Projekte der internationalen Friedensbewegung'. In Friedens- statt Militaereinsatze. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im Aufwind. ed. by Pax Christi. Probleme des Friedens 2-3/1994. Idstein:Komzi Verlag :55-64
- . (1995) 'Gewaltfreies Eingreifen in die Konflikte Ex-Jugoslawiens'. antimilitarismus-information, 25. Jg, Heft 12, Dezember, 55-60
- . (1996a) 'Mit 'Offenen Augen' in Kroatien. Die Arbeit des Balkan Peace Teams'. In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:157:139-144
- . (1996b) 'Was kann die internationale Friedensbewegung in Jugoslawien leisten und was nicht?'. In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:157:223-235
- . (1998) Intervention: zivil, militaerisch oder gewaltfrei? In *Militaer und Politik - Ende der Eindeutigkeiten?*ed. by Grundmann, Martin and Hummel, Hartwig. Baden-Baden:Nomos 1998:76-89
- . (1999a) Krieg und Vertreibung im Kosovo - Ist die NATO Feuerwehr oder Brandstifter? IFGK Arbeitspapier No. 11. Wahlenau:IFGK
- . (1999b) Der Krieg im Kosovo. Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung Hintergrund- und Diskussionspapier No. 1. Minden:BSV
- . (2000a) 'Mir Sada - The Story of a Nonviolent Intervention that Failed'. In Nonviolent Intervention Across Borders. A Recurrent Vision. ed. by Moser-Puangsuwan, Yeshua and Weber, Thomas. Honolulu: Spark M. Matsunaga Institute for Peace: 269-276
- . (2000b) Montenegro: Fall einer verhinderten Kriegspraevention?, Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung Diskussions- und Hintergrundpapier No. 6.Minden:BSV
- . (2003) Nonviolent Intervention. CPS Working Paper No 7. Centre for Peace Studies, Tromsøe
- . (2004) 'Zivile Intervention.' In Krieg und Frieden. Handbuch der Konflikt- und Friedenspsychologie. ed. by Sommer, Gert and Fuchs, Albert. Weinheim/Basel/Berlin: Beltz Verlag: 508-521
- . (2005) Research Report. Complex Interventions Into the Conflicts of Former Yugoslavia, 1988 – 2004. Unpublished report sent to the Deutsche Stiftung Friedensforschung
- . (2006) Human security- providing protection without sticks and carrots? Presentation at the URTF (Unarmed Resistance: the Transnational Factor) seminar July 2006. [online] available from <<http://www.civilresistance.info/seminars/urtf/Christine>> [2.4.2008]
- . (2009) Erfolgreich gewaltfrei. Professionelle Praxis in ziviler Friedensförderung. Ed. Berlin: IFA
- Schweitzer, Christine and Clark, Howard (2002) Balkan Peace Team - International e.V. A Final Internal Assessment Of Its Functioning and Activities. Minden: Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung/ Balkan Peace Team
- Schweitzer, Christine, Aust, Bjoern and Schlotter, Peter (eds.) (2004) Demokratien im Krieg. AFK-Friedensschriften Band 31, Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft

- Schweitzer, Christine, Howard, Donna, Junge, Mareike, Levine, Corey, Stieren, Carl and Wallis, Tim (2001) Nonviolent Peaceforce Feasibility Study. [online] available from <<http://www.nonviolentpeaceforce.org/en/feasibilitystudy>> [20.7.2006]
- Schwerwacher, David (1998) 'Neues Leben aus Ruinen'. Friedensdienst 6, 19-20
- Skoco, Mirjana and Woodger, William (2000) 'The Military and the Media'. In Degraded Capability: The Media and the Kosovo Crisis. ed. by Hammond, Philip and Herman, Edward S. London: Pluto Press :79-87
- Scott, George M., Jr (1990) 'A Resynthesis of the Primordial and Circumstantial Approaches to Ethnic Group Solidarity: Towards an Explanatory Model.' Ethnic and Racial Studies Vol 13, No 2
- Scotto, Giovanni (2001) Peace Constituencies e alleanze per la pace – esperienze in Bosnia-Erzegovina. Laboratorio CESPI n. 5, Roma: Centro Studi di Politica Internazionale [online] available from <<http://userpage.fu-berlin.de/~gscotto/cespi.rtf>>[24.6.2003]
- . (2002a) Die Rolle von externen Nicht-Regierungsorganisationen im Friedensprozess in Bosnien-Herzegowina am Beispiel der Stadt Mostar. Unpublished Ph.D thesis, Berlin
- . (2002b) 'Per uscire dalla guerra. Il ruolo delle parti esterne tra lavoro di pace, azione umanitaria e prevenzione dei conflitti.' In Le Organizzazioni Non Governative e la trasformazione dei conflitti. Le operazioni di pace nelle crisi internazionali. Analisi, esperienze, prospettive. ed by Tullio, Francesco. Roma: Edizioni Associate Editrice Internazionale: 40-54
- . Interview 2001
- Search for Common Ground (n.d.) Search for Common Ground in Macedonia. [online] available from <<http://www.sfcg.org/programmes/macedonia/>> [10.6.2004]
- Seidt, Hans-Ulrich (2002) 'Fuehrung in der Krise? Die Balkankriege und das deutsche Konfliktmanagement.' In Deutsche Konfliktbewaeltigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 39-55
- Sejfiija, Ismet (2007) 'From the 'Civil Sector' to Civil Society? Progress and Prospects.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin:Lit Verlag:125-140
- SEKA (1997) Erholungs- und Seminarhaus fuer Frauen und Kinder aus den Kriegsgebieten des ehemaligen Jugoslawien.Hamburg. (flyer)
- Seke, Igor (2003) End of conscription in Bosnia? E-mail 3 December to list 'wri-internal' (e-mail)
- Sekulic, Dusko (2004) 'Civic and Ethnic Identity: The Case of Croatia.' Ethnic and Racial Studies Vol 27, No 3, May, 455-483
- Selmeci, Andreas (1995) 'Niemand soll sagen, er wisse es nicht. GfbV organisierte internationalen Kongreß zum Genozid in Bosnien.' pogrom 185, October/November:56-59
- Senarclens de Grancy, Regina (1995) 'L'ufficio di Graz per la pace e lo sviluppo e le sue attività nel conflitto della ex-Jugoslavia'. In Per un modello di difesa nonviolento. Che cosa ci insegna il conflitto nella Ex-Jugoslavia? Atti del IV Convegno Nazionale di Ricerca sulla Difesa Popolare Nonviolenta, Vicenza 6-7 novembre 1993. ed. by Drago, Antonino and Soccio, Matteo. Venezia:Editoria Universitaria: 120-121
- 'Serben an die Grenze' (2001) die tageszeitung 9. March:2
- 'Serbien setzt KFOR Frist bis Montag' (2000) die tageszeitung 25. November:9

- Service Civil International (1993) Workcamps in Ex-Yugoslavian – Was fuer den Frieden tun! Bonn
- Seskova, Evridika (2003) 'Macedonia: Debut For Euro Troops'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 409, 25. February
- SFOR (1998) 'MSU intervene in Capljina', First published in SFOR Informer #46, October 7, 1998 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/sfor-at-work/msu/capljina/capljina.htm> [14.10.2002]
- . (2000) 'Soldier's memory serves BiH'. First published in SFOR Informer #80, February 2. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/cimic/soldiersmemory/t000207h.htm> [16.10.2002]
- . (2001a) Brcko De-militarisation. SFOR Fact Sheet, November. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/factsheet/brcko/001116c.htm> [10.10.2002]
- . (2001b) Mine and unexploded ordnance clearance. SFOR Fact Sheet, November. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/factsheet/minedes/t001116e.htm> [10.10.2002]
- . (2001c) Persons indicted for war crimes. SFOR Fact Sheet, November. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/factsheet/warcrime/t001116i.htm> [10.10.2002]
- . (2001d) Project Harvest. November. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/factsheet/opharv/t001116f.htm> [10.10.2002]
- . (2001e) SFOR Restructuring., November. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/factsheet/restruct/t001116g.htm> [10.10.2002]
- . (2001f) Upper Air Space Control. SFOR Fact Sheet, November [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/factsheet/airspace/t001116a.htm> [10.10.2002]
- . (2001g) Bosnia and Herzegovina Road System – the Way Ahead. SFOR Fact Sheet, November. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/factsheet/roadsaf/t001116h.htm> [10.10.2002]
- . (2002) Returns to Polish AOR. SFOR Informer. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/sfor-at-work/pol-aor/t990725c.htm> [14.10.2002]
- . (2003a) History of the NATO-led Stabilisation Force (SFOR) in Bosnia and Herzegovina. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/docu/d98111ga.htm> [19.8.2003]
- . (2003b) SFOR Mission. [online] available from <<http://www.nato.int/sfor/organisation/mission.htm>> [23.10.2003]
- . (n.d.) SFOR Micro-project programs. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/cimic/obnova/t991115e.htm> [16.10.2002]
- Sharp, Gene (1973) The Politics of Nonviolent Action. Boston:Porter Sargent Publisher
- . (2005) Waging Nonviolent Struggle. 20th Century Practice and 21st Century Potential. Boston: Extending Horizon Books/Porter Sargent Publishers
- Sharp, Jane M.O. (1997) Honest Broker or Perfidious Albion? British Policy in the Former Yugoslavia. London:IPRR
- Shearer, David (1998) Private Armies and Military Intervention. Adelphi Paper 316, International Institute for Strategic Studies. Oxford:Oxford University Press
- Shenk, Gerald (1993) God with us? The Roles of Religion in Conflicts in the Former Yugoslavia. Life & Peace Institute Research Report 15. Uppsala
- Shils, Edward (1957) 'Primordial, Personal, and Sacred and Civil Ties.' British Journal of Sociology 8, 130-145

- Siani-Davies, Peter (2003) 'Introduction. International intervention (and non-intervention) in the Balkans.' In International Intervention in the Balkans since 1995, ed. by Siani-Davies, Peter. London/New York: Routledge:1-31
- . (ed.) (2003) International Intervention in the Balkans since 1995. London/New York: Routledge
- Silber, Laura and Little, Allan (1995a) The Death of Yugoslavia. London:Penguin Books/BBC Books
- . (1995b) 2nd edn. Bruderkrieg. Der Kampf um Titos Erbe. Deutsche Bearbeitung Walter Erdelitsch. Graz: Verlag Styria
- . (1996) Yugoslavia: Death of a Nation. New York:TV books
- Silverman, David (2001) 2nd edn. Interpreting Qualitative Data: Methods for Analyzing Talk, Text and Interaction. London: Sage
- Simon, Thomas William (2001) 'The Injustice of Procedural Democracy.' In Reconstructing Multiethnic Societies: The Case of Bosnia-Herzegovina. Sokolovic, Dzermal and Bieber, Florian. Aldershot and Burlington:Ashgate:11-29
- Simons, Marlise (1999) 'Crisis in the Balkans: World Court; Yugoslavia Seeks a Legal Order to Halt the NATO Bombing'. The New York Times, 12 May, [online] available from <<http://query.nytimes.com/gst/fullpage.html?res=9C04E6D8123FF931A25756C0A96F958260>> [6.6.2008]
- Simpson, John and Tanner, Marcus (2004) 'Serb Activists Helped Inspire Ukraine Protests'. Balkan Crisis Report No 530, 26. November
- Sinaia Recommendations – draft, Based on the proceedings of the Conference South-east European NGOs for the stability Pact, Sinaia (Romania), 19th-22nd May 2000 (2000) (paper)
- Sisk, Timothy D. (2001) 'Democratization and Peacebuilding.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 785-800
- Skidelsky, Lord Robert and Mortimer, Edward (1996) 'Economic Sanctions as a Means to International Health.' In Preventive Diplomacy. Stopping Wars Before They Start. ed. by Cahill, Kevin M. New York:Basic Books:154 173
- Skoglund, Daniel (2004) 'Kosovo Peacekeepers Try t Rebuild Reputation'. Balkan Crisis Report 515, 11.September
- Slatina, Senad (2002a) 'Bosnia: Ethnic Divide Widens as Elections Loom'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 357, 9. August
- . (2002b) 'Bosnia: Aid Worker Linked With Bin Laden'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 339, 30. May
- . (2002c), 'Bosnia: Islamists Furious Over Arab Extraditions'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 310, 18.January (falsely titled '2001')
- Slatina, Senad, Lejic, Sanja and Jukic, Zvonimir (2002) 'Catching the Last Train For Europe'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 371, 3. October
- Slim, Hugo and Bonwick, Andrew (2005) Protection. An ALNAP Guide for Humanitarian Agencies. London:ODI 2005. [Online] available from <<http://www.alnap.org/alnappubs.html>> [12.12.2008]
- Sloan, Elinor C. (1998) Bosnia and the New Collective Security. Westport:Praeger Publishers

- Smidoda, Iris (1996) 'Der Arbeitskreis MIR bei ,Ohne Ruestung Leben''. In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:145-150
- Smillie, Ian (1996) Service Delivery Or Civil Society? Non Governmental Organizations in Bosnia and Herzegovina. (Paper written for CARE Canada)
- . (2001a) 'Capacity Building and the Humanitarian Enterprise.' In Patronage or Partnership, Local Capacity Building in Humanitarian Crises. ed. by Smillie, Ian. Bloomfeld:Kumarian Press:7-23
- . (2001b) 'From Patrons to Partners?' In Patronage or Partnership, Local Capacity Building in Humanitarian Crises. ed. by Smillie, Ian. Bloomfeld:Kumarian Press:175-193
- . (ed.) (2001) Patronage or Partnership, Local Capacity Building in Humanitarian Crises, Humanitarianism and War Project, IDRC/CRDI, Bloomfeld:Kumarian Press
- Smillie, Ian and Todorovic, Goran (2001) 'Reconstructing Bosnia, Constructing Civil Society. Disjuncture and Convergence.' In Patronage or Partnership, Local Capacity Building in Humanitarian Crises. ed. by Smillie, Ian. Bloomfeld:Kumarian Press: 25-50
- Smith, Anthony D. (1986) The Ethnic Origin of Nations. Oxford/Cambridge: Blackwell
- Smith, Anthony D. (1994) 'The Problem of National Identity: Ancient, Medieval and Modern?' Ethnic and Racial Studies Vol 17, No 3, July, 375-399
- Smith, Dan (2004) 'Trends and Causes of Armed Conflicts.' In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- Smock, David R. (2002a) 'Introduction.' In Interfaith Dialogue and Peacebuilding. ed. by Smock, David R. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press:3-11
- . (2002b) 'Conclusion.' In Interfaith Dialogue and Peacebuilding . ed. by Smock, David R. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press:127-131
- . (ed.) (1993) Making War and Waging Peace. Washington:USIP Press
- Smock, David R. (ed.) (2002) Interfaith Dialogue and Peacebuilding. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press
- Smyrek, Daniel Sven (2006) Internationally administered territories - international protectorates? An analysis of sovereignty over internationally administered territories with special reference to the legal status of post-war Kosovo. Tuebinger Schriften zum internationalen und europaeischen Recht ; 80. Berlin: Duncker & Humblot
- Social Science Research Council (2004) Scholars' Exchange on Ethnic Conflict in the Balkans 2002-2003. [online] available from <www.ssrc.org/programs/gsc/scholars_exchange/> [13.9.2004]
- Sodeyfi, Leon (2000) 'Nach der Wende'. Friedensdienst 4, 20-21
- Sokolovic, Dzermal and Bieber, Florian (eds.) (2001) Reconstructing Multiethnic Societies: The Case of Bosnia-Herzegovina. Aldershot/Burlington:Ashgate
- Solioz, Christophe (1993) Presentation of the HCA – Geneva Project for Twinning the Civil Society from the Cities of Geneva and Prishtina. Dossier 7, April 1993 (folder with several papers and appeals)
- . (2001) Appropriation du processus de transition et de démocratisation en Bosnie et Herzégovine. [online] available from <www.christophesolioz.ch/2001/aprocessus.pdf> [24.6.2003]
- Soljakovski, Aleksandar (1992) 'An Education in Ethnic Complexity'. Warreport 15, October, 5

- Sommer, Gert and Fuchs, Albert (eds.) (2004) Krieg und Frieden. Handbuch der Konflikt- und Friedenspsychologie. Weinheim/Basel/Berlin: Beltz Verlag
- Spak, Carina (2000) 'Praeventive Friedensarbeit durch Frauensolidaritaet'. Friedensdienst 4, 22-23
- Spear, Joanna (2002) 'Disarmament and Demobilization.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elizabeth M. Boulder and London: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 141-182
- Special Co-ordinator of the Stability Pact for South Eastern Europe (2001) Newsletter Issue 9, 11 July
- Speck, Andreas (2000) Veroeffentlichung zur Kriegsdienstverweigerung in Jugoslawien. E-mail on behalf of War Resisters' International to Bund fuer Soziale Verteidigung, 1 February (e-mail)
- Spelten, Angelika (2001) 'Entwicklungszusammenarbeit als Instrument der Krisenpraevention und des nachhaltigen Wiederaufbaus.' In Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung. Eine internationale Herausforderung. Schriftenreihe des OESFK-Studien fuer europaeische Friedenspolitik vol 8. ed by Mader, Gerald, Eberwein, Wolf-Dieter and Vogt, Wolfgang R. Muenster:agenda Verlag:110-125
- Spinnerets (1999) Canada! Kosovo. Health of the State. [online] available from <<http://www.miniato.net/paul/kosovo/kosovo.htm>> [13.6.2008]
- Sremac, Danielle S. (1999) War of Words. Washington Tackles the Yugoslav Conflict. Westport:Praeger Publishers
- Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe' (2001) In The Operational Role of the OSCE in South-Eastern Europe. Contributing to regional stability in the Balkans. Ed. by Ghebali, Victor-Ives and Warner, Daniel. Aldershot:Ashgate:132-144
- Stallaerts, Robert (2002) 'Montenegro: Splitting the Federation – Split in Society?' In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 309- 321
- Stamkoski, George (ed.) (2002) 2nd edn. With no Peace to Keep. United Nations Peacekeeping and the Wars in Former Yugoslavia. London: Volatile Media
- Stanisic, Sanja (1994) 'The "Pakrac" Project.' Bulletin Voice. Peace and Human Rights No 5, October, 4-5
- Stanojlovic, Dragan (1996) 'Tearing Us Apart'. Warreport No 43, July, 10
- STAR Project (1998) Public Policy Advocacy: Women for Social Change in the Yugoslav Successor States. Zagreb: The STAR project of Delphi International.
- STAR Tracks (1996) Issue II (3-5), Jan.-Mar. Delphi/STAR Project, USA
- Stedman, Stephen John (2001) 'International Implementation of Peace Agreements in Civil Wars. Findings from a Study of Sixteen Cases.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 737-752
- . (2002) 'Introduction.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elizabeth M. Boulder/London: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 1-40
- Stedman, Stephen, John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elizabeth M. (eds.) (2002) Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. Boulder/London: Lynne Rienner Publishers

- Steele, David (2002) 'Contributions of Interfaith Dialogue to Peacebuilding in the Former Yugoslavia.' In Interfaith Dialogue and Peacebuilding. ed. by Smock, David R. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press:73-88
- Steinweg, Reiner (1994) 'Ueber die Bedeutung der kleinsten Schritte und was man dabei falsch machen kann. Vorbeugendes Friedenshandeln am Beispiel des Kosovo-Konfliktes'. In Dem Humanismus verpflichtet. Zur Aktualitaet pazifistischen Engagements. Ed. by Dominikowski, Thomas and Mehl, Regine. Muenster:agenda:155-166
- . (ed.) (1994) Eindruecke vom Kosovo-Konflikt. Bericht einer Delegation aus der Friedensstadt Linz im Herbst 1993. Linz.
- Stephen, Chris (2003) 'US Likely to Set Ultimatum Over Mladic'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 464, 17. October
- Steyrer, Peter (1992a) 'Oesterreichische Waffen im Balkankrieg'. ZAM-Zeitschrift fuer Antimilitarismus 6, 11-12
- . (1992b) 'Antikriegssolidaritaet gegen den Balkankrieg'. Alpe Adria Alternativ 4, 19
- Stichting Vluchtelingen Werk Rijnmond (1993) The Refugee Problem in Europe. March 24 and 25 (conference announcement)
- Stobbe, Heinz-Guenther (1994) 'Die Rueckkehr des Krieges.' In Friedens- statt Militaereinsaetze. Freiwillige Friedensdienste im Aufwind. ed. by Pax Christi. Probleme des Friedens 2-3/1994. Idstein:Komzi Verlag : 31-46
- Stovel, Laura (2000) Confronting Ethnic Chauvinism in a Post-War Environment: NGOs and Peace Education in Bosnia. Working Paper 7, Bradford: Centre for Conflict Resolution
- Strauss, Anselm and Corbin, Juliet (1998) 2nd edn. Basics of Qualitative Research: Grounded Theory. Procedures and Techniques. Sage Publications
- 'Streit um die Sprache' (2001) die tageszeitung 2. August:2
- Stremlau, John (1996) Sharpening International Sanctions. Toward a Stronger Role For the United Nations. A Report to the Carnegie Commission on Preventing Deadly Conflict
- . (1998) People in Peril. Human Rights, Humanitarian Action, and Preventing Deadly Conflict. A Report to the Carnegie Commission on Preventing Deadly Conflict
- Strobel, Warren P. (2001) 'Information and Conflict.' In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press:677-693
- Stubbs, Paul (1996a) 'Humanitarian Organisations and the Myth of Civil Society.' ArkZin No 55, January
- . (1996b) 'Nationalisms, Globalization and Civil Society in Croatia and Slovenia.' In: Research in Social Movements, Conflicts and Change v19 pp1-26 [online] available from <www.stakes.fi/gaspp/docs/paper2.doc> [26.6.2003]
- . (1999) 'Social Work and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina: Globalisation, Neo-feudalism and the State'. Article published in International Perspectives on Social Work, 55-64, [online] available from <www.stakes.fi/gaspp/docs/ipsw.doc>[24.6.2003]
- . (2000) 'Partnership or Colonisation? The Relationship between International Agencies and Local Non-Governmental Organisations in Bosnia-Herzegovina.' In Civil Society, NGOs and Global Governance. ed. by Deacon, Paul et al., GASPP Occasional Papers No 7/2000:23-31 [Online] Available:www.stakes.fi/gaspp/occasional%/20/papers/GASP7-2000.pdf [25.6.2003]
- . (2007) 'Civil Society or Ubleha?' In 20 Pieces of Encouragement for Awakening and Change. Peacebuilding in the Region of the Former Yugoslavia. ed. by Rill, Helena,

- Smidling, Tamara and Bitoljanu, Ana. Belgrade/Sarajevo: Centre for Nonviolent Action: 215-228
- Stuth, Reinhard (2000) 'Stabilitaet in Sicht? Fragen an die europaeische Balkanpolitik'. In KAS/Auslands-Informationen 4, St. Augustin: Konrad-Adenauer-Stiftung: 4-25
- Suedosteuropa auf dem Weg zu Demokratie und Stabilitaet* (2001) Referate einer Tagung vom 10. bis 12. November 2000 in der Evangelischen Akademie Bad Boll, epd-Dokumentation Nr 9/01, 26. February
- Suedserbien: Vorgezogene Wahlen' (2002) die tageszeitung 29. July: 11
- Sunter, Daniel (2003) 'Europe Gives Belgrade Benefit of the Doubt'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 421, 10. April
- Sunter, Daniel and Darmanovic, Boris (2002) 'Serbia: Solana to Push for Union Deal'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 363, 30. August
- Suppan, Arnold (2000) 'Serbien und Europa – ein Rueckblick.' In Europaeisierung versus Nationalismus. Der ex-jugoslawische Raum auf der Suche nach Stabilitaet. ed. by Kumer, Anton, Polzer, Miroslav and Skuhra, Anselm. Frankfurt/Main: Peter Lang: 31-50
- Surroi, Veton (1996) 'The Albanian National Question: The Post-Dayton Pay-off'. Warreport No 41, May, 25-26
- . (2001) 'Ending the Violence'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report, No 228 (part 1), 22. March
- Susskind, L. And Cruickshank, U. (1988) Breaking the Impasse: Consensual Approaches to Resolving Public Disputes. New York: Basic Books
- Svenska Freds (1992) Democracy and Independent Media, Malmoe, 4-6 December 1992 (conference programme)
- Swiss Disaster Relief (2000) SdR Bulletin No. 11
- Szamuely, George (2001) Decline of the West. In Bed With NED. The National Evisceration of Democracy? [online] available from <http://www.antiwar.com/szamuely/pf/p-sz050501.html>
- Tadic-Mikovic, Milka (2000) 'Montenegro on the Brink'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 156, 14. July
- . (2002a) 'Montenegro: President Opts for Premiership'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 380, 7. November
- . (2002b) 'Montenegro: Djukanovic Threatened by Alleged Mafia Links'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 341, 7. June
- Take, Ingo (2002) NGOs im Wandel. Von der Graswurzel auf das diplomatische Parkett. Wiesbaden: Westdeutscher Verlag
- Tanner, Marcus (2004) 'UN Prays For Big Hitter to Replace Holkeri'. IWPR Balkan Crisis Report No 500, 26. May
- Taraba, Nebojsa (1994) 'Serb-Croat Military Cooperation'. Balkan War Report No 26, May, 23-24
- Tauber, Charles (2000) Coalition for Work with Psychotrauma and Peace. CWWPP Update, 28 May
- Technisches Hilfswerk (THW) (2003) Weltweite Einsaetze. UEbersicht 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002. [online] available from www.thw.de/thw-ausland/einsaetze/ [30.10.2003]
- Tenbergen, Rasmus (2000) Der Kosovo Krieg – eine gerechte Intervention? Unpublished Ph.D Thesis, University Aachen

- Terrett, Steve (1999) The Dissolution of Yugoslavia and the Badinter Arbitration Commission. A contextual study of peace-making efforts in the post-Cold War world. Aldershot: Ashgate 1999
- The Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management (2008) Profile. [online] available from <http://www.berghof-center.org/std_page.php?LANG=e&id=8> [7.7.2008]
- The Carter Center (2008) The Carter Center FAQs - Answers to Frequently Asked Questions. [online] available from <<http://www.cartercenter.org/about/faqs/index.html>> [7.7.2008]
- The Danish Center of Human Rights (1993) Minority Rights in Europe. Preventing the Spread of War in the Balkans. Report o the Action Seminar on Human Rights and Democracy in Kosovo/a, Brussels, February 3-5 1993. (conference report)
- The EU's relations with South Eastern Europe: Donor Co-ordination meeting for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia* (n.d.). [online] available from <http://europa.eu.int/comm/external_relations/see/fry/donors.htm> [18.6.2003]
- The Responsibility to Protect - Report of the International Commission on Intervention and State Sovereignty, Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade Canada* (2001). [online] available from <<http://www.dfait-maeci.gc.ca/iciss-ciise/report-en.asp>> [27.8.2004]
- The Sphere Project (ed.) (2000) Humanitarian Charter and Minimum Standards in Disaster Response. Oxford: Oxfam Publishing
- The War-torn Societies Project and Third Party Neutral Models of Conflict Management* (n.d.) [online] available from <www.idrc.ca/peace/> [25.6.2003]
- Theissen, Gunnar (2001) 'Supporting Justice, Co-Existence and Reconciliation after Armed Conflict: Strategies for Dealing with the Past.' In Berghof Handbook of Conflict Transformation. ed. by Bloomfield, David, Fischer, Martina and Schmelzle, Beatrix, Berlin: Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. [online] available from <www.berghof-handbook.net> [17.9.2008]
- Thompson, Nicholas (2001) This Ain't your Momma's CIA. [online] available from <://www.washingtonmonthly.com/features/2001/0103.thompson.html> [7.5.2008]
- Thony, Kristina and Schneider, Patricia (2001) 'Der Beitrag internationaler Gerichte zur Zivilisierung des Konfliktaustrags.' Hamburger Beitræge zur Friedensforschung und Sicherheitspolitik, Heft 127
- Thurswald, Marion (1998) 'Aktivitaeten ermoeöglichen – Vertrauen bilden'. Friedensdienst 6, 18-19
- . (2000a) 'Friedensdienst ist Frauensache'. Friedensdienst 1, 3-5
- . (2000b) 'Alltag und Visionen'. Friedensdienst 4, 3-4
- Tibi, Bassam (1997) 'Der bosnische Islam. Von saekularer Religion zum Fundamentalismus?' Internationale Politik 7/1997:21-28
- Tiffinger, Heidi (1999) 'Die Friedensschule Gorki kotar geht ueber die Grenzen'. Friedensdienst 4, 25-26
- . (2000) 'Mir s tobom – der Friedde sei mit dir'. Friedensdienst 4, 24
- Tiffinger, Helga and Tiffinger, Walter (1998) 'Ein Dauerfriedensdienst in und fuer Gorski Kotar'. Friedensdienst 6, 33-34
- Tilburg helpt voormalig Joegoslavie (n.d.) (flyer)
- Tilburg za Mir (n.d.) Steunpunt voor vredesgroepen in voormalig Joegoslavie. (flyer)
- Tilley, Virginia (1997) 'The Terms of the Debate: Untangling Language about Ethnicity and Ethnic Movements.' Ethnic and Racial Studies Vol 20, No 3, July, 497-522

- Tilly, Charles (2004) Social Movements, 1768–2004. Boulder:Paradigm Publishers
- Tinjak, Ekrem, Boric, Faruk and Griffith, Hugh (2004) 'Investigation: Bosnians Say NATO Bombs Brought 'Angel of Death'.' Balkan Crisis Report No 526
- Tinjak, Ekrem, Boric, Faruk and Griffith, Hugh (2004) 'Investigation: Bosnians Say NATO Bombs Brought 'Angel of Death'.' Balkan Crisis Report No 526, 15. November
- Toncic, Bojan (2002) 'Serbia: Milosevic Trial Grips Nation'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 318, 15. February
- Tonnis, Laurent and Carlen, Jean-Yves (1993) 'Bosnie: Mir Sada, une marche pour la paix.' Non-Violence Actualité 172, September, 10-11
- Topic, Tanja (2007) 'Electronic Media: Regulation Efforts in a Semi-Protectorate.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin:Lit Verlag Fischer: 157-183
- Touval, Saadia and Zartman, I. William (eds.) (1985) International Mediation in Theory and Practice. Boulder:Westview
- Touval, Saadia and Zartman, I. William (2001) 'International Mediation in the Post-Cold War Era. 'In Turbulent Peace. The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. ed. by Crocker, Cheaster A., Hampson, Fen Osler and Aall, Pamela. Washington: United States Institute of Peace Press: 427-443
- Transnational Foundation (2000) 'Increasing Demand for TFF: Training for Forgiveness.' TFF PressInfo # 89, 3.March
- Treffen von Friedensaktivisten in Wien'. Sued Ost Dialog No. 4, August, 24-25
- Trittmann, Uwe (2000) 'Geschichte einer Idee – Das Forum Ziviler Friedensdienst. In Ziviler Friedensdienst. Fachleute fuer den Frieden. Idee – Erfahrungen – Ziele. ed. by Evers, Tilman Opladen: Leske + Budrich: 145-158
- . (ed.) (n.d.) Wenn ihr aufhoern koennt zu siegen...Ausgewaehlte Texte zur friedensethischen Diskussion nach dem Kosovo-Krieg. Institut fuer Kirche und Gesellschaft der Ev. Kirche von Westfalen, Reihe akzente-Texte, Materialien, Impulse, Iserlohn
- Troebst, Stefan (1998) Conflict in Kosovo: Failure of Prevention? An Analytical Documentation, 1992-1998. ECMI Working Papier #1. Flensburg:ECMI
- . (1999) 'Chronologie einer gescheiterten Praevention: Vom Konflikt zum Krieg im Kosovo, 1989-1999.' Osteuropa 49 (1999), H. 8 (August):777-795
- 'Trotz UCK-Aufloesung: Waffen koennen wieder ausgegraben werden. Amber Foxes bald ausgefuchst?' (2001) die tageszeitung 29.September:13
- Truger, Arno (1996) The concept of a European Civilian Peace Corps (ECPC). July, third draft (paper)
- Tubaas, Peter (1998) 'OSCE JOC – Elections 1998', First published in SFOR Informer #45, September 23. [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/sfor-at-work/bih-el98/oscejoc/oscejoc.htm> [1410.2002]
- Tullio, Francesco (ed.) (2002) Le Organizzazioni Non Governative e la trasformazione dei conflitti. Le operazioni di pace nelle crisi internazionali. Analisi, esperienze, prospettive. Roma: Edizioni Associate Editrice Internazionale
- Tullio, Francesco and Vertucci, Raffaele (2002) 'Le ONG italiane fra azione umanitaria e costruzione della pace.' In Le Organizzazioni Non Governative e la trasformazione dei conflitti. Le operazioni di pace nelle crisi internazionali. Analisi, esperienze, prospettive. ed by Tullio, Francesco. Roma: Edizioni Associate Editrice Internazionale: 196-331

- U.S. Department of State (1995) Summary of the General Framework Agreement. Fact Sheet Released by the Office of the Spokesman, U.S. Department of State, November 30. [online] available from <http://www.nato.int/ifor/gfa/gfa-summ.htm> [2.2.2002]
- ‘U.S. Links Sanctions to Kosova’. Illyria No 354, December 5-7,1,3
- ‘U.S. Says Autonomy for Kosova’. Illyria No 339, October 10-12
- ‘UEbergriffe im Kosovo sind Folgen einer unentschiedenen UN-Politik. KFOR zwischen den Fronten’ (2001) die tageszeitung 2. February:11
- Udovicic, Zoran (2001) ‘Media in B-H – The Scope of International Community Intervention’. In International Support Policies to SEE Countries – Lessons (not) learned in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Sarajevo, August. ed. by Fond Otvoreno Drustvo Bosne I Hercegovine:159-169. [online] available from <http://www.soros.org.ba/en/dokumenti/ostali/book/> [8.11.2003]
- UN Security Council Resolution No 713, Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (25.9.1991) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 721, Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (27.11.91) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 724, Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (15.12.1991) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 727, Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (8.1.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 740, Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia /7.2.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 743, Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (21.2.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 749, Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (7.4.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 752, Bosnia and Herzegovina (15.5.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 753, New member: Croatia (18.5.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 754, New member: Slovenia (18.5.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 755, New member: Bosnia and Herzegovina (20.5.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 757, Bosnia and Herzegovina (30.5.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 758, Bosnia and Herzegovina (8.6.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 760, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (18.6.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 761, Bosnia and Herzegovina (29.6.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 762, Former Yugoslavia (30.6.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]
- . No 764, Bosnia and Herzegovina (13.7.1992) [online] available from <http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm> [2.5.2008]

-
- . No 769, Former Yugoslavia (7.8.1992) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 770, Bosnia and Herzegovina (13.8.1992) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 771, Former Yugoslavia (13.8.1992) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 776, Bosnia and Herzegovina (14.9.1992) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 777, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (19.9.1992) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 779, Croatia (6.10.1992) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 780, Former Yugoslavia (6.10.1992) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 781, Bosnia and Herzegovina (9.10.1992) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 786, Bosnia and Herzegovina (10.11.1992) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 787, Bosnia and Herzegovina (16.11.1992) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 795, Macedonia [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]
 - . No 798, Bosnia and Herzegovina (18.12.1992) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 802, Croatia (25.1.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 807, Croatia (19.2.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 808, Tribunal (Former Yugoslavia), (22.2.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 815, Croatia (30.3.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 816, Bosnia and Herzegovina (31.3.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 817, New member: F. Yug. Rep. of Macedonia (7.4.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 819, Bosnia and Herzegovina (16.4.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 820, Bosnia and Herzegovina (17.4.1993)
 - . No 821, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (28.4.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 824, Bosnia and Herzegovina (6.5.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 827, Tribunal (Former Yugoslavia) (25.5.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 836, Bosnia and Herzegovina (4.6.1993) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]

-
- . No 838, Bosnia and Herzegovina (10.6.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 842, Former Yugoslav Rep. of Macedonia (18.6.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 843, Former Yugoslavia (18.6.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 844, Bosnia and Herzegovina (18.6.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 845, Former Yugoslav Pre. Of Macedonia (18.6.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 847, Former Yugoslavia (30.6.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 855, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (9.8.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 857, Tribunal (Former Yugoslavia) (20.8.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 859, (24.8.1993) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]
 - . No 869, Former Yugoslavia (30.9.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 870, Former Yugoslavia (1.10.1993). [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 871, Former Yugoslavia (4.10.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 877, Tribunal (Former Yugoslavia) (21.10.1993) [online] available from
<<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
 - . No 900 (4.3.1994) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]
 - . No 908 (31.3.1994) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]
 - . No 913 (22.4.1994) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]
 - . No 914 (27.4.1994) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]
 - . No 941 (23.9.1994) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]
 - . No 942 (23.9.1994) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]
 - . No 943 (23.9.1994) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]
 - . No 947 (30.9.1994) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]
 - . No 958 (19.11.1994) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]
 - . No 959 (19.11.1994) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>>
[2.5.2008]

-
- . No 967 (14.12.1994) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 970 (12.1.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 981 (31.3.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 982 (31.3.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 983 (31.3.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 987 ((19.4.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 988 (21.4.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 990 (28.4.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 992 (11.5.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 994 (17.5.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 998 [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1003 (5.7.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1004 (12.7.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1009 (10.8.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1010 (10.8.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1015 (15.9.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1016 (21.9.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1018 [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1019 (9.11.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1021 (22.11.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1022 (22.11.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1023 (22.11.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1025 (30.11.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1026 (30.11.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]

-
- . No 1027 (30.11.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1031 (15.12.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1034 (21.12.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1035 (21.12.1995) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1037 (15.1.1996) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1038 (15.1.1996) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1043 (31.1.1996) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1046 (13.2.1996) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1047 [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1058 (30.5.1996) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1066 (15.7.1996) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1069 (30.7.1996) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1074 (1.10.1996) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1079 (15.11.1996) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1082 (27.11.1996) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1088 (12.12.1996) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1093 (14.1.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1103 (31.1.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1104 (8.4.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1105 (9.4.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1107 (16.5.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1110 (28.5.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1112 (12.6.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1119 (14.7.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]

-
- . No 1120 (14.7.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1126 (27.8.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1140 (28.11.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1142 (4.12.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1144 (19.12.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1145 (19.12.1997) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1147 (13.1.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1160 (31.11.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1165 (30.4.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1166 (13.5.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1168 (21.5.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1174 (15.6.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1183 (15.7.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1184 (16.7.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1186 (21.7.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1191 ((27.8.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1199 (23.9.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1203 (24.10.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1207 (17.11.1998) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1222 (15.1.1999) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1244 (10.6.1999) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1247 (18.6.1999) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1252 (15.7.1999) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]

- . No1256 (3.8.1999) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1259 [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1285 (13.1.2000) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1305 (21.6.2000) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1307 (13.7.2000) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1335 (12.1.2001) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1340 (8.2.2001) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1345 (21.3.2001) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1350 (27.4.2001) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1357 (21.6.2001) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1362 (11.7.2001) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- . No 1371 (26.9.2001) [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/documents/scres.htm>> [2.5.2008]
- Ungaro, Carlo (2001) 'The Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia: Status Report.' In The Operational Role of the OSCE in South-Eastern Europe. Contributing to regional stability in the Balkans. ed. by Ghebali, Victor-Ives and Warner, Daniel. Aldershot: Ashgate: 41-46
- Unger, Beno and Leitner, Johannes (1999) 'Ein Jahr Peace Teams in Ost- und Westslawonien'. Friedensdienst 4, 8
- Unger, Gerhard (2000) 'Youth Club: Ein oeffentlicher Raum fuer Jugendliche'. Friedensdienst 4, 16
- UNHCR – United Nations High Commissioner For Refugees (n.d.) Briefing Note.
- UNHCR (1999a) Kosovo Emergency. [online] available from <<http://www.unhcr.org/publ/PUBL/3e2d4d5f7.pdf>> [13.8.2004]
- . (1999b) Kosovo Crisis Update. UNHCR Emergency Updates, 9 June. [online] available from <www.unhcr.ch/cgi-bin/textis/vtx/print?tbl=NEWSid=3ae6b80b10> [13.8.2002]
- . (1999c) The Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. [online] available from <<http://www.unhcr.org/publ/PUBL/3e2d4d601f.pdf>> [7.1.2009]
- . (2000a) The South Eastern Europe: Regional Overview. [online] available from <<http://www.unhcr.ch/cgi-bin/textis/vtx/home?page=search>> [13.8.2004]
- . (2000b) Office of the Chief of Mission Croatia. UNHCR Zagreb (folder)
- . (2001) Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. UNHCR Briefing Notes, 16 November. [online] available from <www.unhcr.ch/cgi-bin/textis/vtx/print?tbl=NEWSid=3bf51b177> [3.2.2002]
- . (2003) Returns Summary to Bosnia and Herzegovina, from 01/01/1996 to 30/06/2003. [online] available from <www.unhcr.ba/return/t4-0603.pdf> [4.8.2003]

- . (2004a) Returns Summary to Bosnia and Herzegovina from 01/01/1996 to 30/06/2004. [online] available from <<http://www.unhcr.ba/return/T4-0604.pdf>> [17.9.2004]
- . (2004b) Statistical Summary as at 30 June 2004. [online] available from <http://www.unhcr.ba/return/Summary_30062004.pdf> [17.9.2004]
- . (2004c) In March 2004, 1,367 refugees and displaced persons returned to their pre-war homes. Press release. [online] available from <http://www.unhcr.ba/press/2004pr/110504.htm> [4.9.2005]
- United Institute for Peace (2003) Can Faith-Based NGOs Advance Interfaith Reconciliation? The Case of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Special Report no 103, March. [online] available from <www.usip.org/pubs/specialreprots/sr103.html> [7.7.2003]
- United Nation Security Council (1995) S/1995/650, Report of the Secretary-General submitted Pursuant to Security Council Resolution 981
- United Nations (1991) Vance Plan. Concept for a United Nations peace-keeping operation in Yugoslavia, as discussed with Yugoslav leaders by the honourable Cyrus R. Vance, Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General and Marrack Goulding, Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs, November/December 1991. (paper)
- . (1994a) Human Rights Questions. Situation of human rights in the foremr Yugoslavia. Note by the Secretary-General, United Nations /49/641 S/1994/1252, 31 October
- . (1994b) The United Nations and the Situation in the Former Yugoslavia. Reference Papier 15 march, Department of Public Information (paper)
- . (1996) Volunteers Against Conflict. United Nations Volunteers. Tokyo: United Nations University Press
- . (1997) Human Rights Questions: Human rights situations and reports of special rapporteurs and representatives. Situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia. Note by the Secretary-General, General Assembly fifty-second session, Agenda item 112 c, A/52/490, 17 October
- . (2002) Use of Sanctions under Chapter VII of the UN Charter, The Former Yugoslavia. Office of the Spokesman for the General Secretary, updated January. [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/News/oss/fy.htm>> [27.8.2004]
- . (2004a) ICTY at a Glance. General Information, updated 23 June. [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/icty/glance/index.htm>> [30.8.2004]
- . (2004b) Individuals publicly indicted since the inception of the ICTY. updated 24 August. [online] available from <<http://www.un.org/icty/cases/factsheets/procindex-e.htm>> [30.8.2004]
- . (n.d.-a) United Nations Protection Force Profile. [online] available from <http://www.un.org/Depts/dpko/dpko/co_mission/unprof_p.htm> [9.8.2004]
- . (n.d.-b) Prevlaka Peninsula – UNMOP-Mandate. [online] available from <www.un.org/Depts/dpko/missions/unmop/mandate.html> [8.6.2003]
- . (n.d.-c) UNMIBH Background. [online] available from <www.un.org/Depts/DPKO/Missions/unmibh/unmibhB.htm> [6.3.2001]
- . (n.d.-d) UNMIBH Facts and Figures. [online] available from <www.un.org/Depts/DPKO/Missions/unmibh/unmibhF.htm> [6.3.2001]
- . (n.d.-e) UNTAES. A Successful UN Mission in the Heart of the Former Yugoslavia. Produced for UNTAES Public Affairs by Pagefast Limited, Lancaster
- . (n.d.-f) Lessons-Learned Report of the Department for Peacekeeping Operations on UNTAES in East Slavonia. no I.12. [online] available from <www.un.org/Depts/dkpo/lessons/untaes.htm> [2.2.2001]

- . (n.d.-g) Prevlaka Peninsula – UNMOP- Background. [online] available from <www.un.org/Depts/dpko/missions/unmop/background.html> [8.6.2003]
- United Nations Development Programme (2004) Human Development Report 1994. New dimensions of human security. [online] available from <<http://hdr.undp.org/en/reports/global/hdr1994/chapters/>> [15.7.2008]
- United States Committee for Refugees (2001) USCR Country Report Yugoslavia: Statistics on refugees and other uprooted people, June. [online] available from <<http://reliefweb.int/rw/rwb.nsf/8b7d095431371f6e852567cb008396bb/6aed4a300333a54c85256a77004e8824?OpenDocument>> [25.6.2008]
- United States Institute for Peace (2001) Special Report: The Future of Macedonia. A Balkan Survivor Now Needs Reform. 23 March
- . (2002) USIP Special Report: Taking Stock and Looking Forward. Intervention in the Balkans and Beyond. February 22.
- ‘Unsicheren Kantonisten macht Europa die Tueren zu’ (1991) die tageszeitung 21. May:3
- Uphoff Carter, Elisabeth (1997) ‘Quick impacts, slow rehabilitation in Cambodia.’ In: Keeping the peace. Multidimensional UN operations in Cambodia and El Salvador. ed. by Doyle, Michael W., Johnstone, Ian and Orr, Robert C. Cambridge:Cambridge University Press 1997:186-205
- ‘US-Berater halfen Albaner-Rebellen’ (2001)Hamburger Abendblatt 28. June:4
- USIA Regional Program Office Vienna (1996) Basic Agreement on Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium. Vienna:UN
- Vack, Klaus (1996a) ‘Helfen statt schießen! Humanitaere, friedenspolitische, menschenrechtliche Hilfe des Komitees fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie im ehemaligen Jugoslawien.’ In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:117-132
- . (1996b) Friedenspolitik mitten im Krieg. Das Exempel Ex-Jugoslawien, Sensbachtal: Komitee fuer Grundrechte und Demokratie
- Valenta, Daniela (2003a) ‘Bosnia: A New Sort of Government’. IWPR’s Balkan Crisis Report No 399, 21. January
- . (2003b) ‘Educating Bosnia’. IWPR’s Balkan Crisis Report No 427, 3. May
- Van Brabant, Koenraad (2001) ‘Armed Protection for Humanitarian Action: What are the questions?’. In Aspects of Peacekeeping. ed. by Gordon, D.Stuart and Toase, F.H. London:Frank Cass: 163-178
- Van den Berghe, Pierre L. (1978) ‘Race and Ethnicity: A Sociobiological Perspective.’ Ethnic and Racial Studies Vol 1, No 4, October
- Van der Stoel, Max (2001) ‘Capital Invested in Conflict Prevention is Capital Well Spent’. In Peace and Stability through Human and Minority Rights. Speeches by the OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities, ed. By Wolfgang Zellner and Falk Lange, 2nd edn. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft:60-68
- Van Meurs, Wim and Brusis, Stefan (2000) ‘Eliten, Mobilisierungsmuster und Transitionspfade in Serbien’. Vorabdruck aus Suedosteuroopa 49 /10 (paper)
- Van Meurs, Wim and Weiss, Stefani (2004) Kosovo’s Fifth Anniversary – On the Road to Nowhere? Bertelsmann Stiftung, Zentrum fuer angewandte Politikforschung
- Van Selm, Joanne (2001) ‘Perceptions of Kosovo’s ‘refugees.’ In Kosovo. Perceptions of War and its Aftermath. ed by Buckley, Mary and Cummings, Sally N. London:continuum: 251-265

- Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette (eds.) (2002) Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. Boulder: Lynne Rienner Publishers
- Van Tongeren, Paul, Brenk, Malin, Hellema, Marte and Verhoeven, Juliette (eds.) (2005) People Building Peace II. Successful Stories of Civil Society. Utrecht: European Centre for Conflict Prevention
- Vandiver, Margaret (2001) 'Reclaiming Kozarac: Accompanying Returning Refugees'. In Reconstructing Multiethnic Societies: The Case of Bosnia-Herzegovina. ed. by Sokolovic, Dzemail and Bieber, Florian. Aldershot and Burlington: Ashgate :167-184
- Vankovska, Biljana (n.d.) Current Perspectives on Macedonia. A Four-part Series, Heinrich-Boell-Foundation. (c. 2002) (paper)
- Vasovic, Milenko (1999) 'Travel Bans are More Effective Than Most Sanctions. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 75, 14.9.1999
- . (2000) 'Serbian Opposition Parties Unite'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 106, 12. January
- VENRO (2003) Streitkraefte als humanitaere Helfer? Moeglichkeiten und Grenzen der Zusammenarbeit von Hilfsorganisationen und Streitkraeften in der humanitaeren Hilfe. VENRO-Positionspapier, Bonn, May.
- Vereinte Nationen- Der Hohe Fluechtlingskommissar (2001) 'Aktueller Ueberblick ueber die Lage im Kosovo'. In Suedosteuropa auf dem Weg zu Demokratie und Stabilitaet?, Referate einer Tagung vom 10. bis 12. November 2000 in der Evangelischen Akademie Bad Boll, epd-Dokumentation Nr 9/01, 26. Februar 2001:47-52
- Verhinderung einer Kriegsausweitung auf den Kosovo* (1993). Minutes of meeting on 20 January 1993 in Bonn. Minutes taken by Christine Schweitzer. (minutes)
- 'Vermintes Gebiet. Wie Schueler den Aufbau in der Balkanregion unterstuetzen.' (2002) In Hinz & Kunzt 118/ December, 30-31
- Vetter, Matthias and Melcic, Dunja (1999) 'Synopse zu Opfern, Schaeden und Fluechtlingen.' In Der Jugoslawien-Krieg. Handbuch zu Vorgeschichte, Verlauf und Konsequenzen. Ed. by Melcic, Dunja. Opladen/Wiesbaden: Westdeutscher Verlag: 524-530
- Vejvoda, Ivan (2009) 'Civil Society versus Slobodan Milosevic: Serbia, 1991–2000'. Manuscript to be published in Civil Resistance and Power Politics, ed. Roberts & Garton, chap.18 (forthcoming)
- Vezic, Goran (2001) 'Protests Threaten Croatian Tourism'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report, No 221, 23. February
- Vive Zene (1995) Therapycenter for women and children. Tuzla (flyer)
- Vizuete, Juan (1999) 'Refugee Reconnaissance Returns Teams (RRRT)', First published in SFOR Informer #56, March 3, 1999 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/cimic/marinecimic/marinecimic.html> [16.10.2002]
- Vodinelic, Vladimir V. (2002) The Past as a challenge to the law. Serbian side of the legal coping with the past. ed. by Center for Advanced Legal Studie and Helsinki Committee for Human Rights in Serbia, Belgrade
- Volle, Angelika and Weidenfeld, Werner (eds.) (2002) Der Balkan zwischen Krise und Stabilitaet. Beitraege und Dokumente aus Internationale Politik. Bielefeld: W.Bertelsmann Verlag
- Volle, Angelika and Wagner, Wolfgang (eds.) (1994) Der Krieg auf dem Balkan. Die Hilflosigkeit der Staatenwelt. Beitraege und Dokumente aus dem Europa-Archiv. Bonn: Verlag fuer Internationale Politik

- Volmer, Ludger (2002) 'Was bleibt vom Pazifismus?' Frankfurter Rundschau, 7. January
- 'Vom papierenen Frieden zur sicheren Rueckkehr? Zur Debatte um die Rueckkehr bosnischer Kriegsfluechtlinge. Gemeinsame Erklaerung des Deutschen Caritasverbands, Abteilung Migration, DGB Bundesvorstand, Referat Migration, Interkulturellen Beauftragten der Evangelischen Kirche in Hessen und Nassau, Foerderverein Pro Asyl e.V.' (1996). In Jenseits der Gewalt. Arbeit fuer den Frieden in Ex-Jugoslawien. ed. by Pax Christi. Idstein:Komzi-Verlag:255-271
- Von Kohl, Christine and Libal, Wolfgang (1992) Kosovo: gordischer Knoten des Balkan. Wien/Zuerich: Europaverlag
- Von Merveldt, Jan-Dirk (1998) 'UN Media Policy. Lessons to be Learned to Counter War Propaganda'. In UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations in a Civil War-like Conflict. ed. by Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin. Hants/Brookfield:Ashgate: 253-261
- Von Muenchow, Sebastian (2002) 'Deutschlands Rolle in den Missionen der OSZE auf dem Balkan. Engagement – wenig Einfluß?' In Deutsche Konfliktbewaeltigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft:173-193
- Von Pilar, Ulrike (1999) Humanitarian Space Under Siege. Some Remarks from an Aid Agency's Perspective. Backgroundpaper prepared for the Symposium 'Europe and Humanitarian Aid – What Future? Learning from Crisis', 22 and 23 April 1999 in Bad Neuenahr. [online] available from <<http://www.aerzte-ohne-grenzen.de/coding/aktuell/konferenzpapier.rtf>> [2.1.2001]
- Vorfi, Gjon (1997) 'The Peace village comes to life', First published in SFOR Informer #26, Decmeber 24, 1997 [online] available from <www.nato.int/sfor/humanitarian/belg-aust/peace.htm> [16.10.2002]
- Voß, Reinhard J. (2000a) Schalomdiakonot. Erfahrungen und Einsichten zur Gewaltfreiheit. Idstein:Meinhardt
- . (2000b) 'Geschichte der Friedensdienste in Deutschland'. In Ziviler Friedensdienst. Fachleute fuer den Frieden. Idee – Erfahrungen –Ziele. ed. by Evers, Tilman Opladen: Leske + Budrich: 127-144
- Vujadinovic, Dragica (n.d.) Prospects for and Obstacles to the Development of Civil Society in Serbia/FRY After the Change. Institute for Philosophy and Social Theory. [online] available from http://institut.institfdt.bg.ac.yu/ifdt/izdanja/zbornici/revipor/030VujadinovicDpdf_e [3.1.2002]
- Vukadinovic, Nebojsa (2000) 'Die Wirtschaftsregion Balkan am Tropf des Westens' in: Le Monde diplomatique Nr 6293 from 10.November, 4-5
- Vukosavljevic, Nenad (2007) Training for Peacebuilding and Conflict Transformation. Experiences of the 'Centre for Nonviolent Action' in the Western Balkans. Berlin:Berghof Research Centre for Constructive Conflict Management
- Vukovic,Zeljko (1996) 'Das unvollendete Drama der Staatenbildung im ehemaligen Jugoslawien.' In Internationale Politik und Gesellschaft, Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung, 1, 56-68
- 'Waffen sammeln mit der Stopuhr' (2001) die tageszeitung 23.August:8
- 'Waffenruhe fuer Suedserbien vereinbart' (2001) die tageszeitung 13. March:1
- Wagner, Heinz (2000) 'Vom NRW-Modellvorhaben zur Arbeitsgemeinschaft Qualifizierung. Ein no-name-Produkt auf dem Weg zum Markenzeichen.' In Ziviler Friedensdienst.

- Fachleute fuer den Frieden. Idee – Erfahrungen – Ziele.* ed. by Evers, Tilman Opladen: Leske + Budrich: 240-256
- Wagtmann, Michael (2000) 'The FRESTA Approach: Stimulating Cross-Border Connections in Civil Society.' In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette Boulder:Lynne Rienner Publishers: 63-70
- Wahlgren, Lars-Eric (1998) 'Start and End of Srebrenica'. In UN Peacekeeping in Trouble: Lessons Learned from the Former Yugoslavia. Peacekeepers' Views on the Limits and Possibilities of the United Nations in a Civil War-like Conflict. ed. by Biermann, Wolfgang and Vadset, Martin. Hants/Brookfield:Ashgate: 168-185
- Wake, Jim Lessons (2005) Learned from Peacebuilding Practices in Asia Pacific. [online] available from <http://www.conflict-prevention.net/print_article.php?id=677> [10.9.2008]
- Walker, William (1999) On-the-record-briefing on the Kosovo Verification Mission, released by the Office of the Spokesman, January 8, 1999; OSCE press release No 12/99 [online] available from <osce.org/inst/secret/presrel/kpr12-99.htm> [14.5.1999]
- War Report (1998) A farewell to arms? Final issue, no 58, February-March
- War Resisters' International (1991a) Press Statement: Yugoslav Intellectuals Make Proposal to Stop the War. Wednesday, 27 November (press release)
- . (1991b) Can pacifists do anything to stop the war in Yugoslavia? [online] available from <<http://www.wri-irg.org/statemnt/appeal-1991-en.htm>> [11.6.2008]
- . (1992a) War Resisters' International Program for Ending the Violence in Former Yugoslavia. Proposal sent to Mac Arthur Foundation, 1.July. (paper)
- . (1992b) No to Military Intervention in Bosnia. Open Letter from WRI and IFOR to the anti-war movements in former Yugoslavia. [online] available from <<http://www.wri-irg.org/statemnt/bosinter.htm>> [11.6.2008]
- . (1993a) Fax Message to Christine Schweitzer, Dorie Wilsnack, Joergen Johansen by Howard Clark, re Tirana seminar, March 22. (fax)
- . (1993b) Minutes of War Resisters' International Council, 19-23 July 1993, Centro Mons Carraro, Verona, Italy. (minutes)
- . (1994) War Resisters' International Office Report 1991-94, for presentation at the 1994 Triennial, 10-17 December, Sao Leopoldo, Brazil (paper)
- . (1998a) War Resisters' International Office Report 1994-1998 for presentation at the 1998 Triennial 19-26 September, Porec, Croatia (paper)
- . (1998b) Statement on War in Kosovo/a, Porec, 26.9.98. (press release)
- . (2002) War Resisters' International Office & Executive Committee, Report 1998-2002 to the 23rd Triennial Conference Dublin/Ireland, 3-11 August 2002 (paper)
- . (2004a). Notes of the participant observation at the seminar on conscription, Ohrid/Macedonia, 20-25 June 2004
- . (2004b) Report of Dealing with the Past at Ohrid Seminar 2004. [online] available from <<http://www.wri-irg.org/news/2004/dwtp-coun04-en.htm>> [4.7.2008]
- . (2004c) 'Dealing with the Past.' The Broken Rifle No 60, March
- . (2005) Program Area 'Dealing with the past.' [online] available from <<http://www.wri-irg.org/dealpast.htm>> [22.4.2005]
- . (2008) 'War Profiteer of the Month. KBR.' War Profiteers' News 13, June

- War Resisters' International and International Fellowship of Reconciliation (1992) No to military intervention in Bosnia. [online] available from <<http://www.wri-irg.org/statemnt/bosinter.htm>> [11.6.2008]
- Wasmuth, Ulrike C. (1987) 'Die Entstehung und Entwicklung der Friedensbewegungen der achtziger Jahre. Ihre geistigen Stroemungen und ihre Beziehung zu den Ergebnissen der Friedensforschung.' In Neue soziale Bewegungen in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland. ed. By Roth, Roland and Rucht, Dieter. Frankfurt am Main: Campus: 109-133
- Weaver, Tim (1998) 'The End of War. Can Television Help Stop It?' Track 2. Vol 7, No 4. [online] available from <http://www.ccr.uct.ac.za/archive/two/7_4/p21_endofwar.html> [10.6.2008]
- Weber, Bodo (1993) Den Kriegstreibern ein wenig das Wasser abgraben. Reisebericht von Bodo Weber / Ak-Mir. July. (paper)
- . (1995) Bericht von einer Reise durch Serbien und Montenegro, inklusive Vojvodina, Kosovo und Sandzak, 13.-28. Mai 1995.Arbeitskreis Mir/Stuttgart. (paper)
- Weber, Christa (2001) Interview April 2001
- Weber, Thomas (1996) Gandhi's Peace Army: The Shanti Sena and Unarmed Peacekeeping. New York: Syracuse University Press, 1996
- . (2000) 'A History of Nonviolent Interposition and Accompaniment.' In Nonviolent Intervention Across Borders. A Recurrent Vision. ed. by Moser-Puangsuwan, Yeshua and Weber, Thomas. Honolulu: Spark M. Matsunaga Institute for Peace:45-72
- Weingardt, Markus A. (2007) 'Religionsbasierte Akteure der zivilen Konfliktbearbeitung.' In Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung. Aktuelle Forschungsergebnisse. ed. by Weller, Christoph. Institut fuer Entwicklung und Frieden, INEF-Report 85: 46-51
- Weishaupt, Harald (1999) 'Smalltalk, Computer und Fußball. Vom langen Weg zum Frieden. Interview mit Harald Weishaupt, Friedensfachkraft in Jaice, Bosnien-Herzegowina, Absolvent des 3. Kurses.' In Friedensfachdienst ist machbar! Profis der zivilen Konfliktbearbeitung im Einsatz. ed. by Arbeitsgemeinschaft Qualifizierung fuer zivile Konfliktbearbeitung/Zivilen Friedensdienst. Bonn: 18-21
- Weiss, Thomas G. (1996) 'Humanitaere Intervention. Lehren aus der Vergangenheit, Konsequenzen fuer die Zukunft.' In Der neue Interventionismus. Humanitaere Einmischung zwischen Anspruch und Wirklichkeit. ed. by Debiel, Tobias and Nuscheler, Franz. Bonn:Dietz/ Stiftung Entwicklung und Frieden: 53-75
- Weiss, Thomas G. (1999) Military-Civilian Interactions. Intervening in Humanitarian Crises. Lanham:Rowman & Littlefield Publishers
- Welfens, Paul J.J. (2001) Stabilizing and Integrating the Balkans. Economic Analysis of the Stability Pact, Eu Reforms and International Organizations. Berlin:Springer, 2001
- Weller, Christoph (2007) 'Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung: Begriffe und Konzeptentwicklung.' In Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung. Aktuelle Forschungsergebnisse. ed. by Weller, Christoph. Institut fuer Entwicklung und Frieden, INEF-Report 85: 9-18
- . (ed.) (2007) Zivile Konfliktbearbeitung. Aktuelle Forschungsergebnisse. Institut fuer Entwicklung und Frieden. INEF-Report 857
- Weller, Marc (1999) The Crisis in Kosovo 1989-1999, International Documents and Analysis. Vol. 1, Cambridge: Documents & Analysis Publishing Ltd
- Wenger, Andreas and Perovic, Jeronim (1995) 'Das schweizerische Engagement im ehemaligen Jugoslawien.' Zuercher Beitrage zur Sicherheitspolitik und Konfliktforschung Heft Nr 36, Zuerich: FSK

- Wenig, Marcus (1999/2000) 'Wo die Kosovo-Mission an ihre Grenzen stieß.' In Perspektiven und Defizite der OSZE. ed. by Lutz, Dieter S. And Tudyka, Kurt P. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft:81-90
- Wette, Wolfram (ed) (1995) Deserteure der Wehrmacht. Essen:Klartext Verlag
- Wheeler, Mark (2001) 'SFOR Uncertainty Endangers Bosnia'. IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report, No 251 (part 2), 31. May
- White, Sarah C (2000) 'Depoliticising Development: The Uses and Abuses of Participation'. In Development, NGOs and Civil Society. Ed. by Pearce, Jenny. Oxford: Oxfam, 142-155
- Wiberg, Hakan (1995) 'La Jugoslavia e la soluzione dei conflitti: problemi e lezioni.' In Per un modello di difesa nonviolento. Che cosa ci insegna il conflitto nella Ex-Jugoslavia? Atti del IV Convegno Nazionale di Ricerca sulla Difesa Popolare Nonviolenta, Vicenza 6-7 novembre 1993. ed. by Drago, Antonino and Soccio, Matteo. Venezia:Editoria Universitaria: 36-52
- Wilkinson, Ray (2001) 'The Long Road Home.' Refugees Vol 3, No 124: 6-10, 15 —16. [online] available from <<http://www.unhcr.org/publ/PUBL/3ccec76d0.html>> [25.6.2008]
- Will, Thomas (2002) 'Bataillonskommandeur im Kosovo. Erfahrungen im Einsatz'. In Deutsche Konfliktbewältigung auf dem Balkan. Erfahrungen und Lehren aus dem Einsatz. ed. by Biermann, Rafael. Baden-Baden:Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft: 263-284
- Willets, Peter (1997) 'Transnational Actors and International Organizations in Global Politics.' In The Globalization of World Politics. An Introduction to International Relations. ed. by Baylis, John and Smith, Steve. Oxford:Oxford University Press: 287-310
- William, Paul and Scharf, Michael (2002) 'The Letter of the Law.' In With no Peace to Keep. United Nations Peacekeeping and the Wars in Former Yugoslavia. ed. by Stamkoski, George. London: Volatile Media: 58-75
- Willmutz, Stefan (2001) Interview March
- Wils, Oliver (2004) War Veterans and Peacebuilding in Former Yugoslavia. A Pilot Project of the Centre for Nonviolent Action (CNA). Berghof Occasional Paper No 24, Berlin:Berghof
- Wilson, Nick (2007) 'Chapter 14: Peacebuilding in Croatia - The Pakrac Project' [online] available from <<http://www.civilresistance.info/challenge/pakrac>> [27.6.2008]
- Wimmer, Andreas, Goldstone, Richard J., Horowitz, Donald L., Joras, Ulrike and Schetter, Conrad (eds.) (2004) Facing Ethnic Conflicts. Towards a New Realism. Lanham et al: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers
- Wintersteiner, Werner (1992) 'Jugoslawien zum Beispiel. Die Friedensbewegung am Ende. Eine Nestbeschmutzung.' Vorabdruck aus Zeitschrift AUFRISSE, Heft 3
- Wintersteiner, Werner (1993) 'alpe adria: Zur Geschichte eines Blattes'. In Alpe Adria 3, 12-14
- . (1994) 'Zusammenleben ist moeglich: Serben und Kroaten in Gorski Kotar. In Jahrbuch Frieden 1994. Konflikte, Abruestung, Friedensarbeit. Muenchen: Beck'sche Verlagsbuchhandlung: 225-232
- Wirmark, Bo (ed.) (1998) Government-NGO Relations in Preventing Violence, Transforming Conflict and Building Peace. Report from a Conference in Mariefred, Sweden, September 4-6, 1997. Organised by Peace Team Forum, Sweden and supported by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. Stockholm

- Witte, Eric A. (2000) 'Die Rolle der Vereinigten Staaten im Jugoslawien-Konflikt und der außenpolitische Handlungsspielraum der Bundesrepublik Deutschland (1990-1996).' Mitteilungen des Osteuropa-Institut Muenchen Nr 32, Muenchen:Osteuropa-Institut
- Wochein, Gerd (1997) 'Mehr als bloß ein Dach ueber dem Kopf'. Friedensdienst 6, 27-28
- Wolf, Peter (1997) 'BiH-ONLINE'. Friedensdienst 6, 21-22
- Wolff, Stefan (2003) 'The Limits of Non-Military International Intervention: A Case Study of the Kosovo Conflict.' In Understanding the War in Kosovo. ed. by Bieber, Florian and Daskalovski, Zidas London/Portland: Frank Cass Publishers:79-100
- Women in Black (1994) Drittes Internationales Treffen Frauen in Schwarz. in /CL/EUROPA/BALKAN 2.June
- . (n.d.) A Short History of Women in Black [online] available from <<http://www.womeninblack.org/history.html>> [8.6.2008]
- . (ed.) (1994a) Women for Peace. Belgrade
- . (ed.) (1994b) Deserters from the War in Former Yugoslavia. Belgrade:WiB
- Women for Peace (ed.) (1996) Women in Black. Belgrad
- Womens' Aid to Former Yugoslavia* (1996) (flyer)
- Woodhouse, Tom (1991) International Conflict Resolution: Some Critiques and a Response. University of Bradford: Centre for Conflict Resolution, Department of Peace Studies Working Paper 1
- Woodward, Susan L. (1995) Balkan Tragedy. Chaos and Dissolution after the Cold War. Washington:The Brookings Institution
- . (1996) Implementing Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina: A Post-Dayton Primer and Memorandum of Warning. The Brookings Institution, May 1996 [online] available from <www.brook.edu/views/articles/woodward/1996BI.pdf> [14.10.2002]
- . (1999) 'Transitional Elections and the Dilemmas of International Assistance to Bosnia and Herzegovina.' In Three Dimensions of Peacebuilding in Bosnia. Findings from USIP-Sponsored Research and Field Projects. Peaceworks 32. ed. by Riskin, Steven M. December. [online] available from <www.uip.org/pubs/peaceworks/pwks32.pdf> [25.6.2003], 5-9
- . (2002) 'Economic Priorities or Successful Peace Implementation.' In Ending Civil Wars. The Implementation of Peace Agreements. ed. by Stedman, Stephen John, Rothchild, Donald and Cousens, Elizabeth M. Boulder ad London: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 183-214
- World Peace and Relief Team (1992) Peace Walk to Sarajevo, with accompanying letter to Netzwerk Friedenskooperative. 16 August. (letter)
- . (n.d.) Mobiles Spital fuer die Stadt Zenica in Bosnien. (c. 1991) (leaflet)
- World University Service (2008) WUS- World University Service. [online] available from <<http://www.wusgermany.de/index.php?id=941>> [18.7.2008]
- Wullweber, Helga (1993) 'Kriegsverbrechen Vergewaltigung.' Wissenschaft & Frieden 1, [online] available from <<http://www.uni-muenster.de/PeaCon/wuf/wf-93/9311101m.htm>> [4.6.2008]
- Wylie, J.C. (1967) Military Strategy: A General Theory of Power Control. New Brunswick: Rutgers University Press
- Wynaendts, Henry (1993) L'engrenage. Chroniques yougoslaves juillet 1991-aout 1992. Editions Denoel :Paris
- Xharra, Jeta (2004) 'Kosovo Serbs Hail Election Boycott as Triumph'. Balkan Crisis Report No. 523, 29. October

- Xhudo, Gazmen (1996) Diplomacy and Crisis Management in the Balkans. A US Foreign Policy Perspective. New York: St. Martin's Press
- Young, Anna (1998) International oder lokal? (manuscript)
- Yugofax (1992) Breakdown: War & Reconstruction in Yugoslavia. Yugofax. A Project of War Report and the Helsinki Citizens Assembly. London
- 'Yugoslavia to set up 'truth commission' on war crimes' (2001) Agence France Presse, January 10. [online] available from <<http://www.balkanpeace.org/hed/archive/jan01/hed2399.shtml>> [8.3.2001]
- Zagreb Women's Lobby: Award For Peace' (1993) Arkzin Summary International Edition No 7, November, 7
- Zahner, Luke (2002) 'Bosnia: Abdic Turns Spotlight on Bihac'. In IWPR's Balkan Crisis Report No 321, 28. February
- Zartman, I. William (1995) 'Systems of World Order and Regional Conflict Resolution.' In Cooperative Security. Reducing Third World Wars. ed. by Zartman, I. William and Kremenyuk, Victor A. New York: Syracuse University Press:3-24
- . (2000) Mediation in Ethnic Conflicts. Center for Development Research (ZEF Bonn), Facing Ethnic Conflicts (14-16, December) (paper)
- . (ed.) (1995) Elusive Peace: Negotiating an End to Civil Wars. Washington: The Brookings Institution
- Zartman, I. William and Kremenyuk, Victor A. (eds.) (1995) Cooperative Security. Reducing Third World Wars. New York: Syracuse University Press
- Zartman, I. William and Touval, Saadia (1985) 'International Mediation: Conflict Resolution and Power Politics.' In Journal of Social Issues Vol 41, No 2, 27-45
- Zasto je uhapsen prevodilac UNPROFOR-a?' (1993) arkzin 5, 14
- Zdravo da ste Hi Neighbour (1994) Programme for Collaboration with International Volunteers., Belgrade (c. 1994) (paper)
- Zellner, Wolfgang (2002) 'The OSCE: Uniquely Qualified for a Conflict-Prevention Role.' In Searching for Peace in Europe and Eurasia. An Overview of Conflict Prevention and Peacebuilding Activities. ed. by Van Tongeren, Paul, van de Veen, Hans and Verhoeven, Juliette Boulder: Lynne Rienner Publishers: 15-25
- Zillén, Eva (1997) 'Why We Came and Why We Stayed.' In Women and the Politics of Peace. Contributions to a Culture of Women's Resistance. ed. by Centre for Women's Studies. Zagreb: Centre for Women's Studies: 35-38
- Zimmermann, Warren (1996) Origins of a Catastrophe. Yugoslavia and its Destroyers – America's Last Ambassador Tells What Happened and Why. New York/Toronto: Times Books
- Zitzlaff, Kristian and Schmidt, Christian (1999) 'Chronologischer Leitfaden. Daten, Zahlen und Entwicklungen zum Kosovo-Konflikt im Ueberblick.' antimilitarismus information 29. Jg, Heft 7, July, 41-56
- Zoellner, Oliver (2005) Lehrveranstaltungskommentar. Krisen- und Kriegsberichterstattung und journalistische Ethik. [online] available from >http://www.research-worldwide.de/uni-ddorf_ss2005.html> [10.6.2008]
- Zucconi, Mario (2001) 'Introduction: Eight Years of Economic Sanctions Against Serbia.' In The Effects of Economic Sanctions: the case of Serbia. ed. by Franco Angeli Zucconi, Milano: 7-23
- . (2001) 'Too Uncertain a Pressure-Strategy and a Serbian Politics Scarcely Sensitive to Sanctions.' In The Effects of Economic Sanctions: the Case of Serbia. ed. by Franco Angeli Zucconi, Milano: 113-133

- . (ed.) (2001) The Effects of Economic Sanctions: the Case of Serbia. Milano: Franco Angeli
- Zuelich, Tilman (1990) 'Bricht Jugoslawien auseinander?' Interview mit Hans Rullmann. Pogrom 155, September / October, 13-28
- Zumach, Andras (1995) 'US Intelligence Knew Serbs Were Planning an Assault on Srebrenica.' Basic Reports, British American Security Information Council, No 47, 16 October 1995:1
- Zumach, Andreas (1997) 'New Evidence Further Implicates France in Fall of Srebrenica.' Basic Reports. British American Security Information Council, No 56, 11 February, 1-3
- Zumach, Andreas (2001) "'Je dois me débarrasser de cette enclave'." 16 May, [online] available from <www.ecn.org/lists/globe_1/200105/msg00033.html> [13.4.2004]
- 'Zuendeln in der Feuerzone' (2001) die tageszeitung 10.March:4
- Zunes, Stephen (2008) Warum die USA nicht an allem Schuld sind und wie gewaltfreie Revolutionen ohne USA auskommen. Notes of a presentation given at the Kurve Wustrow (Germany) on 20 July 2008, taken by Christine Schweitzer
- Zupan, Natascha (2007) 'Facing the Past and Transitional Justice in Countries of Former Yugoslavia.' In Peace Building and Civil Society in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ten Years after Dayton. Berghof Research Center for Constructive Conflict Management. ed. by Fischer, Martina. 2nd edn. Berlin: Lit Verlag Fischer: 327 – 342
- 'Zwei Drittel geerntet' (2001) die tageszeitung 14. September:16

Appendix 1. Instruments of Conflict Intervention

The following inventory is a direct result of the survey of state and non-state actor interventions in the area of former Yugoslavia. It does include activities that have not been mentioned in the case study, and also a few standard methods that have not been applied in the area of the former Yugoslavia. These are put in brackets. Referenced are only those that have not been described in the study.

1. Peace-making

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
By Law	(International Court settling conflict) ⁴⁰⁶
By Negotiation	Activate institutions of Early Warning and Early Crisis Management ⁴⁰⁷	(Early warning and early action system at grassroots' level) ⁴⁰⁸
		Second-track problem-solving workshops
	Good offices	Good offices
	Shuttle mediation	Shuttle mediation
	Pure mediation at high level ⁴⁰⁹	Pure mediation at all levels
	Use existing umbrella organisations to discuss issues	Use existing umbrella organisations to discuss issues
	High-level conferences without immediate direct meeting of conflict parties
	Face-to-face negotiation at high level, facilitated and/or led by internationals
	Declarations and appeals ⁴¹⁰	Grassroots protest and appeals directed at the governments and other leaders of the countries in conflict.

⁴⁰⁶ Did not happen in case study.

⁴⁰⁷ CSCE mechanism initiated in 1991.

⁴⁰⁸ This has not happened (to my knowledge) in this case here with the exception of some discussion and public action by the War Resisters' International Council in 1990. However, there are examples from other parts of the world (for example Nonviolent Peaceforce in the Philippines, see www.nonviolentpeaceforce.org).

⁴⁰⁹ The EC mediated in conflict between Italy and Slovenia between 1992 and 1997 (Lampe 2000:394).

⁴¹⁰ Declarations and appeals are one of the most common instruments of diplomatic relations, both in normal times, but growing in number in crisis

Functions may be:

- Express concerns and warnings
- Inform public and other governments on positions taken

	Establishment of permanent institutions and round tables of governments	Permanent institutions or round tables of oppositional politicians and/or civil society leaders
	Establish Standing Conferences
	Propose peace plans	Propose (alternative) peace plans
	Propose structural solutions (secession or solutions within existing borders, e.g. autonomy models)	Propose structural solutions
		Second-track meetings / conferences seeking to develop solutions
	Offer Membership in International Institutions and Cooperation Agreements
	Micro-negotiations	Micro-negotiations
	Implementation Talks ⁴¹¹
	Inofficial Meetings Between Negotiators and Conflict Parties ⁴¹²
	Arbitration ⁴¹³
By Force (includes pressure)	Recall ambassadors, close consulates	Boycott by citizens ⁴¹⁴
	Establish No-flight zone
	Arms embargo
	Oil embargo
	Withdraw support	Withdraw support ⁴¹⁵
	Trade sanctions
	Ban on investments in sanctioned country
	Freeze assets in other countries
	Ban on cultural exchanges (participation in sports events)
	Travel ban
	Stop issuing visa for certain personally identified individuals
	Support as reward ⁴¹⁶
	Air force, marine or army for surveillance of sanctions
	Air force, marine or army for enforcement of sanctions
	Bombing as a sanction/ punishment
	Conduct manoeuvres as warning ⁴¹⁷

⁴¹¹ For example the Peace Implementation Council that met regularly to discuss the progress made on the Dayton Peace Agreement.

⁴¹² On 28.-29 November 1992 the co-chairmen Owen and Vance paid a visit, said to be “private” to President Tudjman at Brioni. According to Owen they accepted the invitation in order to discuss ‘some of the more challenging concepts’ (Owen 1995:xiv, 72)

⁴¹³ The two cases in the survey are the Badinter Commission 1991, and an international arbitration decision to transfer the Brcko district in BiH from RS control to a condominium to share with Bosniak-Croat Federation (Egger 1999:19, Partos 2001:51)

⁴¹⁴ Not used in this case.

⁴¹⁵ NGOs have withdrawn their support, e.g. stopped relief efforts after attacks on them and/ or at least threatened to do so. An example is the ICRC that interrupted its work in Bosnia-Herzegovina for several months in 1992 after a convoy was attacked (Mercier 1995).

⁴¹⁶ For example the ‘Energy for Democracy’-programme of the EU in winter 1999/2000

	Arms deliveries (legal or illegal)
	Training of local forces
	Send military advisors
	Send mercenaries	Send / come as mercenaries or join int'l volunteer brigades ⁴¹⁸
	Air strikes to directly force a conflict party to lay down its arms and to agree to a ceasefire / peace treaty by destroying its (military) resources
	Conduct land operations to directly force a conflict party to lay down its arms and to agree to a ceasefire / peace treaty by destroying its (military) resources
	Cooperation with local troops
	Establishing permanent military presence

2. Peace-keeping

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
General	Send military peace-keepers
	Send civilian peace-keepers (Monitoring Missions)	Send civilian peace-keepers (peace teams, monitoring missions)
	Send International Police as peace-keepers
	Send Military Observers
By Force	Surveillance of cease-fires
	Disarmament of soldiers
	Separation of troops
	Creation of demilitarized zones and 'safe areas'
	Armed protection of humanitarian aid
	Open blocked roads, remove check points by armed forces
	Accompany IDPs and refugees, or ethnic minorities ⁴¹⁹
	Protect international military and civilian personnel
By Non-violent Deterrence and reference to international law	Presence in situations where human rights violations may happen	Presence in situations where human rights violations may happen
	Monitoring of courts, refugee camps, communities, regions, POWs	Monitoring of courts, refugee camps, communities, regions, POWs

⁴¹⁷ As warnings. For example, NATO expanded May 1998 its military exercises with Albania and Macedonia as a warning to FRY (Kaufman 2002:159).

⁴¹⁸ There have been such international units in both the Croatian and the Bosnian wars. Some may have come with the 'support' of their government (for example from Iran), others came clearly on their own, like a Bosnian Serb paramilitary group calling themselves the "Heroes" at the Sarajevo airport. Among them were Japanese, Russians and one American (Meder/Reimann 1996:10, Tibi 1997, Rose 1998:65). Think also of the International Brigades in the Spanish Civil War 1936-37.

⁴¹⁹ For example did KFOR accompany Serb children to school in Kosovo after the 1999 war.

		Protective accompaniment (of IDPs) and refugees, ethnic minorities or activists)
	Publish findings	Publish findings
	Exchange of detainees and PoW ⁴²⁰	Exchange of detainees and PoW
	Interpositioning of armed or unarmed forces to prevent violence	Interpositioning of unarmed forces by staying in threatened area to prevent violence
		Interpositioning by a moving caravan of activists
By Relationship-Building		Contact-building in communities (often peace-building activities)
		Network or bridging of local activists with other international actors
		Bridging local activists to authorities
		Make international law known to conflict parties
	Use military peace-keepers for relief and civil reconstruction tasks
	Media work, press releases, establish own mass media to explain mission ⁴²¹	Media work, press releases, establish own (probably not:mass) media to explain mission

3. Peace-building

3.1 General, multi-purpose

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
Material aid	Collect donations for various projects and activities	Collect donations for various projects and activities
Non-physical support	Longterm missions for peace-building purposes ⁴²²	Civil peace service projects with well-qualified staff ⁴²³
		Send short-term volunteers ⁴²⁴
		Send long-term volunteers ⁴²⁵
	Twinning of municipalities	Support twinning of municipalities

3.2 Humanitarian Relief

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
Material aid	Finance relief goods: food, medicine, clothes, etc.	Collect money for relief goods
		Collect material relief goods
	Transport relief goods	Transport relief goods
	Deliver relief goods	Deliver relief goods

⁴²⁰ Not only ICRC, also ECMM involved themselves in this in BiH.

⁴²¹ E.g. radio station that SFOR had in BiH)

⁴²² OSCE mission. Mostly for transitional justice and state-building tasks.

⁴²³ Mostly for social and psycho-social support and civil society building.

⁴²⁴ For humanitarian, reconstruction or civil society building purposes.

⁴²⁵ For humanitarian, reconstruction or civil society building purposes.

	Set up and run camps for refugees & IDPs	Set up and run camps for refugees & IDPs
	Finance stay of refugees in third country	Finance stay of refugees in third country
	Establish medical facilities and services	Establish medical facilities
	(Soup kitchens)	Set up soup kitchens
	(Set up orphanages)	Set up orphanages
	(Set up child care and kindergardens)	Set up child care and kindergardens
		Host refugees in private homes
Information	Searching for missing persons	Searching for missing persons ⁴²⁶
	Counselling, advise of refugees and IDPs	Counselling, advise of refugees and IDPs
Non-physicalsupport	Evacuation of threatened people ⁴²⁷	Evacuation of threatened people
	Receive refugees in third countries	Support refugees in third countries
		Send volunteers as humanitarian workers
		Bring wounded children or adults for treatment to third countries
		SOS telephones
		Send doctors and nurses to work in hospitals
Law	Give war refugees legal status in third country
	Expand asylum reasons (e.g. rape, desertion)
Civil disobedience		Hide refugees threatened with deportation
		Bring refugees to third country against will of that country
		Smuggle refugees (e.g. deserters) out of country to help them escape persecution

3.3 Disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of soldiers (DDR)

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
Material aid	(Financial incentives to hand in weapons)
	Financial aid for reintegration	Financial aid for reintegration
Information	Training of veterans	Training of veterans
	Information on re-integration schemes (financial aid, etc)	Information on re-integration schemes (financial aid, etc)
Force	Collect weapons
	Set up storage centres for weapons

⁴²⁶ ICRC (Mercier 1995).

⁴²⁷ UNHCR evacuates Croats and Muslims from Serb-held areas in Bosnia and Croatia (Mercier 1995:151)

3.4 Reconstruction and refugee return

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
Material aid	Physical reconstruction of houses by internationals	Physical reconstruction of houses by internationals
	Physical reconstruction of infrastructure (roads, energy, water) by internationals	Physical reconstruction of infrastructure (roads, energy, water) by internationals
	Provide building materials	Provide building materials
	Provide money for salaries for construction workers	Provide money for salaries for construction workers
	Provide seeds, machinery / tools for income-generating projects	Provide seeds, machinery / tools for income-generating projects
	Financial support of senior people	Financial support of senior people
		Use international volunteers for reconstruction
		Help with harvest
		Provide fuel, wood etc
Information	(legal and other) advise for returnees	(Legal and other) advise for returnees
		Link people to reconstruction programmes by other actors
	Mine awareness training	Mine awareness training
Non-physical support	Check-point meetings between people from territories that cannot be visited by people from the 'other side'.
	Parcel delivery programme across borders that locals cannot cross	Take messages, letters, perhaps parcels across borders that locals cannot cross
	Village visitation programme across borders that locals cannot cross
		Send volunteers as humanitarian workers for 'social reconstruction'
Force	Deport refugees after end of war

3.5 Social and psycho-social work

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
Material aid	Finance local women groups for their work in psychological care	Finance local women groups for their work in psychological care
		Build home for elderly people
Information	Educate children in refugee camps	Educate children in refugee camps
		Language lessons
		Literacy courses
		Computer lessons
		Training in trauma therapy
		Handicraft courses
		Photography courses
		Computer courses
Non-physical support		House visits to clients (e.g. elderly people)
		Social work in camps
		Play with children (in camps or communities)
		Organise discos

		Work with women and men's groups, set them up
		Establish youth clubs and youth centres
		Establish internet cafés
		Organise sports activities and tournaments
		Newspaper, film and radio programmes with youth
		Programmatic activities in youth clubs other than sports and education
		Organize holiday camps for children and youth
	Establish shelters for traumatized women (and children)	Establish shelters for traumatized women (and children)
		Meetings and conferences of young people
		International youth exchange
		Psycho-social workshops
		Individual trauma therapy
		Group trauma therapy
		SOS telephones
		Twinning projects of schools
		Set up family mediation projects

3.6 Economic recovery

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
Material aid	Large-scale credit to governments
	Machinery / tools and resources for income-generation projects	Machinery / tools and resources for income-generation projects
	Grants to governments
	Donor conferences
	Support / insure private investments	Investment by private firms
	Establish banks
	Debt relief
	Micro-credit schemes	Micro-credit schemes
Information	Financial advising
	Vocational training	Vocational training
Non-physical support	Trade agreements, give trade advantages
	Introduce new currency
	Privatisation schemes
		Promote special branches of economic development (e.g. ecological tourism)
		Organise trade union work

3.7 Transitional Justice

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
Information	International Police as advisors and trainers

	Human rights reporting	Human rights reporting
	Training of personnel in the juridical system (police, judges, prison wards etc)	Training of personnel in the juridical system (police, judges, prison wards etc)
	Counselling of citizens	Counselling of citizens
Non-physical support	Support establishment of local courts
	Human rights monitoring missions / projects (general)	Human rights monitoring missions / projects (general)
	Monitoring of police	Monitoring of police
	Monitoring of courts	Monitoring of courts
	Help to set up truth commissions	Help to set up truth commissions
	Help to establish lustration	Help to establish lustration
	Establish human rights centres	Establish human rights centres
	Nomination of special rapporteurs or High Commissioners ⁴²⁸
		Support victims' reparation
		Public events discussion dealing with the past
		Support publications, films etc. on dealing with the past
		Support establishment of memorials and museums
Law	Create human rights institutions ⁴²⁹
	Investigation of war crimes and criminals
	Establish special tribunal for war crimes	Support work of the tribunal through fact-finding
	Use other international courts for persecution of war crimes
	Support establishment of local courts dealing with war crimes and human rights violations	Support establishment of local courts dealing with war crimes and human rights violations
	Offer amnesties
Force	Pressure on countries to extradite suspects
	Arrests of suspected war criminals by international forces

3.8 State-building, democratisation and civil society support

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
Material aid	Finance reforms
	Equip military (weapons, vehicles etc) (legal or illegal)	Fundraise for local groups
	Finance oppositional / democratic parties	Finance oppositional / democratic parties
	Donation of of electronic equipment or paper for media	Donation of of electronic equipment or paper for media
	Finance independent media	Finance independent media
	Provide books, laboratories and other teaching materials	Provide books, laboratories and other teaching materials

⁴²⁸ UN rapporteur, CSCE/ OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities.

⁴²⁹ Ombudsperson for Human Rights in BiH (Riegler 1999:34, Haller 2003)

	Stipend programme for students	Stipend programme for students
	Donate computers and office equipment	Donate computers and office equipment for parties and NGOs
Information	Training of security sector personnel (police, judges, prison wards, local military forces)	Training of security sector personnel (police, judges, prison wards, local military forces)
	Voter education	Voter education
	Train oppositional or democratic parties	Train oppositional or democratic parties
		Train election monitors
	Train journalists	Train journalists
	Advising on media laws and regulatory frameworks	Advising on media laws and regulatory frameworks
	Send military advisors
		Advise students
	Human rights training	Human rights training
Non-physical support	Creation of interim government
	Implement central government functions
	Help to establish civil administration	Help to establish civil administration
	Draft laws	Draft laws
	Veto decisions made by national parliaments or government
	Initiate or support institutional reforms	Support institutional reforms
	Internationals in national institutions ⁴³⁰
	Deploy international police with executive functions
	Run prisons ⁴³¹
	Set up or advise on tax system	Advise on tax system
	Set up or advise on customs system	Advise on customs system
	Set up border controls
	Help to establish juridical system with police, courts and prisons	Help to establish juridical system with police, courts and prisons
	Organise elections	Support election campaigns
	Monitor elections	Monitor elections
	Suggest and / or support conduct of referendum	Suggest and support conduct of referendum
	Help people to regain their personal documents	Help people to regain their personal documents
	Help to establish schools	Institutions at / around schools: pupils councils, parent-teacher associations
		International school partnerships (twinings)
		Educational web-site
		Support local groups or parties in fundraising
	Information centres on civic rights issues	Information centres on civic rights issues

⁴³⁰ For example international judges in Bosnian Constitutional Court (Riegler 1999:30), and UNMIK sent international attorneys of law to Kosovo (Knoll/Molina 2002:162)

⁴³¹ UNMIK Civil Administration took over responsibility for prison in Prizren (O'Neill 2002:70, 125pp).

		Networking local groups or parties to international organisations and networks abroad
		Networking between local groups from different 'sides' of war
		Communication aid for local groups: Establishment of international fax or e-mail networks across borders
		Link local groups or parties to authorities
		Link local groups or parties to internationals in country
		Linking between local groups from different conflict areas
		Invite delegations of NGOs or parties to third countries
		International volunteers to work with local groups
		Provide meeting space for local groups or parties
		Provide transportation for local groups or parties
		Translations for local groups
		Build a meeting house for local groups
	Make available non-commercial meeting venue for NGOs	Make available non-commercial meeting venue for NGOs
	Award prizes to local activists, media etc.	Award prizes to local activists, media etc.
		Publish internationally appeals or articles written by local groups
		Public calls to desert / avoid military service
	Open permanent base in conflict areas (e.g. OSCE missions)	Open permanent base in conflict areas (e.g. 'peace embassy')
		Help establish data-base for administration
	Help to establish higher education	Help to establish higher education
		Exchange of (university) teachers
		Conduct campaigns on different educational issues
		Bring students to third countries for education
		Conduct summer universities
		Exchange of scientists
		Networking between media and journalists from different countries
	Organisation of international meetings of journalists (and networks)	Organisation of international meetings of journalists (and networks)
	Creation of media or media programmes by international actors	Creation of media or media programmes by international actors
	Establish or advise on media laws and frameworks	Advise on media laws and frameworks
		Support for media institutions: media centres, journalist associations or unions, self-regulatory bodies Publish books or articles by local writers

	Establish public libraries / reading rooms ⁴³²
	Establish community centres, cultural centres	Establish community centres, cultural centres
Law	Agree to mutually recognise educational degrees
Force	Enforce reforms
	Fire politicians / office-holders
	Fire civil servants
	Enforce reporting or omissions in local media
	Close down media

3.9 Promoting Peace Skills and Dialogue

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
Material aid	Fund peace-related activities by local groups	Fund peace-related activities by local groups
Information		Training in 'peace skills': Methods of dealing with conflict (e.g. mediation, Alternatives to Violence, non-violent communication)
		Training in 'peace skills': issues of working in a group (e.g. consensus decision-making, strategizing, analysis)
		Training in 'peace skills': Active nonviolence (campaigning, protest)
Non-Physical support		(Inter-ethnic) dialogue meetings / conferences
		Religious dialogue meetings / conferences
		Organise inter-religious prayers and services
		Help to found dialogue groups / organisations
		Conduct Active Listening
		Establish peace teams / peace service teams

3.10 Cultural activities

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
Material aid		Financial support
Non-Physical support		Organize meetings and workshops of artists
		Organize sports' events
		Publish CDs by local artists
		Organise concerts, theatre plays etc.
		invite artists to third countries or to

⁴³² e.g. OSCE in BiH organise exhibitions

		Sponsor/ establish permanent institutions to support arts

4. Information, Protest and Advocacy

Here I would like to refer to Gene Sharp's 198 method of nonviolent action (see Sharp 1973 and 2005).

In this survey only a small number of them were actually found.

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
		Public reports in mainstream mass media
		Alternative media reporting differently or on issues not present in mass media
		Translate and publish articles etc by local groups abroad
		Publish internationally appeals of local organisations
		,Pure research'
		Appeals & Open Letters
		Press releases
		Press conferences
		Flyers / folders
		Collect signatures under appeals
		Declarations expressing a position
		Information Evenings
		Panel Discussions
		Conferences
		Alternative 'Tribunal'
		Speaking tours of local activists
		Information campaigns in schools
		Photo exhibitions
		Demonstrations
		Vigils
		Peace prayers
		Symbolic nonviolent actions
		Fasts
		Conferences for advocacy purposes
		Meetings with politicians and civil servants for advocacy purposes
		Establish a permanent presence in capitals or at seat of international organisations
Law		Law suits against governments
Civil disobedience		Non-violent blockades of military installations (of interveners)

5. Capacitate the Interveners

	State Actors	Non-state Actors
Material aid	Fund int'l NGOs	Fund other int'l NGOs
Information	Train international personnel	Train international personnel
	Reports of Ambassadors, Envoys etc
	Intelligence Services research and reports	Evaluation meetings of interveners
	Coordination of Diplomatic Means ⁴³³
	Investigations, fact-finding missions	Investigations, fact-finding missions
		Action research
		Evaluations of projects
	Coordination of work inside country (usually international) ⁴³⁴	Coordination of work inside country (usually international)
		Coordination of groups working on the conflict abroad (usually in one country)
		Surveys
		Expertises
Non-Physical support	Scientific Conferences	Scientific Conferences
		Directories of interveners and projects
		Information visits for int'l politicians, activists, journalists etc. to area
Law	Laws on volunteering
	Laws on sending workers abroad
	Laws enabling people to leave work-place quickly for emergency work abroad
	Laws allowing conscientious objectors to serve abroad

⁴³³ Either during regular meetings the interveners have anyway, or in extra meetings set up for the purpose. See the reports of the different negotiators, for example Owen 1995, Bildt 1998, Holbrooke 1998.

⁴³⁴ For example UNHCR coordination meetings. In 1996 the OSCE initiated a Round Table of all Youth Centres in Mostar which met every other week (Loskot 1997)

Appendix 2. Distribution of Certain Types of Activities During and After Wars

Training in peace skills

In Croatia the war raged mostly in the second half of 1991. From 1992 there was a cease-fire lasting until 1995 when the occupied parts of Croatia were militarily reunited with Croatia. The number of trainings in nonviolence, conflict resolution given by international non-state groups (NGOs and smaller citizens’ groups) found in the sample were 10 already in 1991, 8 in 1992, 11 in 1993 and 4 each in 1994 and 1995. Some of the 10 from 1991 also gave trainings later than 1991. The horizontal figures mean 1991, 1992 etc., the vertical figures are the numbers.⁴³⁵

Table 7) Training in peace skills

⁴³⁵ The total amount of non-state organisations counted in the survey is 769.

Psycho-social workshops and trauma work in Bosnia-Herzegovina

While the numbers increased dramatically after the end of the war in 1995, there has been a considerable number before 1996 already.

Table 8) Psycho-social work

Youth Centres

The same picture we have with Youth Centres and comparable youth work in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina taken together. Also here the numbers grew over the years but with a clear and larger than negligible number before 1996.

Table 9) Youth Centres

Physical reconstruction

Organisations active in physical reconstruction of houses in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina show the following picture:

Table 10) Physical reconstruction

